100,000 See Notre Dame Capture Cup; Juno Upsets

Alagi Is Second; Aradam Is Third

Notre Dame, the blue and white cigar-shaped Detroit speed boat, yesterday won the President's Cup regatta as Alagi, Italian challenger, set a 15-mile time record and Juno, runaway victor in yesterday's opening heat, overturned.

Clell Perry drove the Herbert Mendelson racer, which finished second yesterday, to a decisive triumph in the second 15-mile heat of the 45-mile event and then cautiously piloted it to second place in the final heat.

The President's Cup race is run in three heats, with points for the various heat position finishes as well as for fastest single heat and fastest elapsed time for the 45 miles. Perry's earlier first and second assured him of victory if he could finish second in the final race and so he made no effort to battle with Alagi as it roared to a 15-mile record.

More than 100,000 persons braved lowering skies and a chill northwester for a thrill-packed afternoon.

It was an awe-filled throng that saw Jack Rutherford's sensational little racer Juno literally torn to pieces as she shot high in the air and sank, hurling Rutherford and his mechanic, Commander Jack Lynch, into the river.

A moment later Maude Rutherford came roaring past the spot where her husband's boat sank—unaware that rescue craft had pulled Jack and his mechanic from the water, miraculously uninjured. She drove her Miss Palm Beach gamely on in a hopeless race, until forced out by motor trouble.

Jack Races Again.

Later Mrs. Rutherford said, "I couldn't see Jack—I didn't know whether he'd been killed or not—I was just sick!" When she asked him about his mechanic, Jack replied, "Don't worry about Lynch; he came up with the gas tank (torn out of Juno in the crash) and floated in style until the Coast Guard arrived!"

Smiling and cheerful in defeat, although his chances of repeating last year's triumph were gone, Jack

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 26.—Federal agents were asked tonight to join in a search for Charles C. Rose, 71, retired greeting-card manufacturer, reported kidnaped last night by three men who stopped his automobile on a highway near Chicago.

Assistant Police Chief George Cites, of Franklin Park, said Ross' former secretary, Miss Florence Freihaga, 45, told him Ross had been forced at gunpoint to leave his automobile and accompany the three men in another automobile.

Cites said a State-wide police search is under way.

He said Miss Freihaga told him a car followed them as they drove toward Chicago from Sycamore, Ill., and when Ross slowed down a man in the other car halted them with machine and said, "My boss sent me to get you. This is a snatch."

Mrs. Ross said she believed her husband had been mistaken for someone else. He had no enemies, she told police. No demand for ransom had been received.

Later in the week the President will spend two nights and days in Seattle, going from there on Thursday to Victoria, British Columbia, by naval destroyer for luncheon with Lieut. Gov. Hamber. Friday will be devoted to inspection of Grand Coulee Dam. Then Mr.

Boy Shot Dead In College After Religious Row

By the United Press.

Columbia, Mo., Sept. 26.—Albert Waters, 18, of Kansas City, Mo., a sophomore in the University of Missouri, was found shot to death today in the Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity House a short time after he had engaged in an ardent discussion of religion with a fellow student.

Jack Kilpatrick, of Oklahoma City, a freshman fraternity brother of Waters, was taken into custody by police pending the outcome of a coroner's inquest tomorrow.

Coroner W. H. Toalson said he doubted whether Waters committed suicide.

Had Been Despondent.

Fraternity brothers of Waters said he had been despondent for several days, but that they thought the shooting was accidental. Some of them said they understood Waters and Kilpatrick had been discussing religion for some time, when suddenly Waters said:

"I wouldn't mind communing with my Maker now."

Members of the fraternity said they found the pistol, which belonged to Kilpatrick, on a table in the room where Waters died.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Sept. 26.—Soviet Russia announced tonight that Japan had been warned she would be held entirely responsible for any bombing—either accidental or intentional—of the Soviet Embassy in Nanking.

Russian officials declared Japan had been thus informed despite Japan's officially conveyed report of a Chinese plot to draw Russia into the Sino-Japanese conflict by raiding the Nanking Embassy.

Japanese consular officials in Shanghai reported to Russian representatives three days ago that Chinese were repainting their planes to resemble Japan's aircraft. The Japanese said China planned to attack the Soviet Embassy in an effort to rouse Russia's ire to the point of joining forces against Japan.

The Soviet reply, delivered yesterday to the Japanese consul general at Shanghai, declared Russian authorities considered the report a "pure provocation showing the intention of some Japanese military powers to bombard the Soviet Embassy intentionally and then try to escape responsibility."

Student Near Death In a 200-Foot Leap From Calvert Span

Thomas Harper, 24, Howard University student, leaped from the 200-foot span of Calvert Street Bridge yesterday and was still alive last night to tell about it.

Doctors at Emergency Hospital marveled that the student survived the lofty fall. Police said his body, unconscious, was found lying on a bridle path near Cathedral avenue.

Although Harper recovered consciousness sufficiently to tell a story of worry about his studies, doctors were doubtful of his survival. He suffered a broken back and leg and possible internal injuries.

Only reason he is still alive, police said, was that he fell into some trees. Broken branches indicated the young man had landed in boughs which broke the force of his long drop.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Raleigh, N. C., Sept. 26.—The Cherokee Indians in the Great Smoky Mountains, descendants of warriors and squaws who eluded capture by Federal troops in 1846, will march to the polls soon to decide whether to allow the white man to run an important highway through their reservation.

For two years the Indians have been refusing to give up the needed right-of-way. They have feared that it would cut through some of their best farm land and even through their yards. Remembering, too, how a pale-face government robbed them before, they have been fearful that this might be another attempt to despoil them of their land.

The outcome of the forthcoming referendum—the date for which must be set by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes—has particular interest for Washington, because the road in question is the Blue Ridge Parkway.

This parkway begins in Washington, leads down through the Shenandoah National Park in Virginia and then curves southward to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in this State.

By their votes, the Cherokees will determine whether the parkway is to enter the Great Smoky National Park through their Qualla reserva-

Hitler, Duce To Continue Aid to Rebels

Watch Maneuvers, Plan to Reject Demand of French, British.

Fuehrer Balks at More Sacrifices to Fight Reds in Spain.

By the United Press.

Mecklenberg, Germany, Sept. 26. Fuehrer Adolf Hitler and Premier Benito Mussolini, who saw Germany's war machine in action on the Baltic shores today, have decided to reject Anglo-French demands for withdrawal of their "volunteers" from Spain, it was reported tonight.

The two dictators were said in responsible Italian quarters to have reached their agreement as a means of preserving "international respect" for their Rome-Berlin axis.

Hitler, who put the finest units of his Army through their paces in maneuvers near here, was said to have warned Il Duce against extending his Spanish venture in any way which might bring reprisals from France and Great Britain.

Enthusiasm Cools.

Der Fuehrer reportedly agreed with Mussolini, as they stood side by side on the Mecklenberg heaths watching thousands of Nazi troops, tanks and warplanes fight a mimic war, that Italy could not bow to France's demands for withdrawal of all foreign troops from the Spanish Insurgent armies.

Hitler, whose enthusiasm for Spanish intervention has cooled noticeably in the last four or five months, at the same time warned his fellow dictator that France's "trump card" can not be overlooked, it was said. He referred to the threat of Yvon Delbos, French Foreign Minister, to Renata Bova-Scoppa, Italian League observer, that France's southern frontier will be thrown open to permit a flow of men, materials and munitions to the Spanish loyalists unless Mussolini pulls out of Spain and leaves the war to the Spaniards.

Informed Italians admitted that Hitler gave Mussolini to understand that Germany refuses to make any new sacrifices to promote the "anti-Communist" war in Spain.

Duce Disappointed.

This was regarded as a blow to Il Duce's hopes of obtaining Hitler's pledge that German military aid would be forthcoming in event of a war involving Italy in the Mediterranean.

Hitler was said to have impressed upon Mussolini the fact that, although Germany wishes to reduce her liabilities in the Mediterranean, she does not want to place any strain upon the Rome-Berlin axis which might cause it to break down.

It was regarded as probable that Hitler sugested that the two totalitarian powers concentrate upon strengthening the axis by collaboration in other fields.

Mussolini was said to have been "highly impressed" by the efficiency, discipline and equipment of the German troops he watched in action today from little Schmookberg Mountain, near the Mecklenberg town of Tolzin.

Tomorrow Mussolini will see Germany's huge munitions factories at Essen before arriving in Berlin at Heerstrasse Station at 5:30 p. m.

The highlight of the two-day program in Berlin will come Tuesday when the dictators speak at Olympic Stadium.

Emmet Dies After 10 Days As U. S. Minister to Austria

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, Sept. 26.—Grenville T. Emmet, new United States Minister to Austria, died today of double pneumonia, after a short illness.

Mr. Emmet, a former law partner of President Roosevelt, had been in active charge of the American ministry here for only ten days. He was appointed July 6.

He first became ill Thursday. Only a few persons knew of his illness, which he had insisted at first was merely a bad cold.

The tall, robust diplomat has prided himself on his health. He had not had even the slightest illness for 32 years.

At his bedside when life ended were Mrs. Emmet, John C. Wiley, new legation counselor, and four physicians.

Soon after he presented his credentials to President Wilhelm Miklas September 14, Mr. Emmet contracted a slight cold but apparently recovered. He carried out

21 More Shot As 'Wreckers' In Soviet Purge

12 Accused of Plotting Caucasian Revolt, 5 With Grain Spoilage.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Sept. 26.—Soviet Russia's awesome list of executions was swelled today when 21 more men were shot as disloyal "wreckers" in the agricultural industry.

Twelve were accused of plotting rebellion at two tractor stations in the Caucasus. There previously had been numerous executions in this regions for alleged plotting of a seaparatist revolt.

Four officials of a sugar factory at Kiev were given the supreme penalty on charges of treason and mismanagement of the plant.

Meanwhile, indigation meetings were held in Moscow to protest Japanese bombardment of Chinese cities and villages.

Resolutions criticizing these attacks by "Japanese imperialists" were drawn up by workers.

They were the first evidences of Soviet feeling over the Sino-Japanese conflict, which so far has failed to produce the customary editorial blasts in the press.

Attorney Kills Self In Brother's Home

Ashley's body was found slumped over a kitchen chair by his brother about 11 a. m., after Dr. Hawken was aroused from bed by the odor of gas. All the gas jets were open on the stove.

Dr. Hawken said he attempted to revive his brother but his efforts were futile and he pronounced the man dead.

English Ruler Of Galilee Slain By Terrorists

Bodyguard Also Dies as 3 Assailants Ambush Pair at Church.

By the Associated Press.

Jerusalem, Sept. 26.—The British commissioner of Galilee, Lewis Andrews, was shot and killed today by a band of terrorists that waited in ambush outside a Nazareth church until the official emerged from Sunday services.

The commissioner's bodyguard, Constable Peter McEwan, was also killed in the fusillade of bullets.

Witnesses declared that three assailants, two clad in European clothing and one in peasant dress, fired the fatal shots at close range, killing the British official instantly. McEwan died a half hour later.

Authorities of strife-torn Palestine, disrupted by a long-standing Arab-Jew conflict, immediately closed all roads leading from Nazareth and started a search for the Terrorists.

Andrews had gained the enmity of extremists because of the strictness of his rule as district commissioner and his life had been threatened frequently.

The assistant district commissioner, Pirie Gordon, narrowly escaped death or injury in the assault.

Japanese Called 'Militarily Weak'

San Francisco, Sept. 26 (AP).—One of China's foremost scholars, Dr. Hu Shih, asserted today the undeclared war in his country had revealed "the military weakness of Japan."

Dr. Hu, diplomatic adviser to the Chinese government and special counselor of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, flew to America aboard the Philippine Clipper today, en route to Washington.

Contending Japan had "failed miserably" in the use of her air power, Dr. Hu said the bombing of Shanghai, Nanking, and other cities had accomplished little in a military way.

New Troops Rushed.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, Sept. 26. — Japanese rushed men and munitions into their Shanghai lines tonight to meet a Chinese counter attack, and start a Japanese offensive designed to crush all Chinese resistance in this area.

Rear Admiral Tadao Honda, Japanese naval attache, warned that Japanese bombardment of Chinese noncombatants "will be duly carried out" regardless of loss of life, if it becomes necessary "by virtue of their residence near military objectives."

Japanese army officers announced flatly that they plan a major drive along the whole Shanghai front, and added that when the push gets under way, "it will be like a flood breaking down the dikes."

Chinese Change Generals.

Chinese officers pointed out, however, that the Japanese have failed to dislodge the defenders in successive attacks. They said Chinese lines are strong enough to inflict heavy losses.

Gen. Chu Shao-Liang, first in rank among military subordinates of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, took over command of Shanghai armies, relieving Gen. Chang Chih-Tsung. No reason was given for the change.

In counter attacks today, the Chinese claimed they broke through the invaders' lines along the front northwest of Shanghai, recaptured two villages, and continued to advance. Japanese answered the attack with a heavy artillery bombardment. Japanese reinforcements of troops and guns moved to the front.

Reports from North China, where Japanese have conquered the Chinese stronghold of Paotingfu and advanced southward, indicated Japan is talking peace to accomplish its objectives.

The advices said Japanese are attempting to persuade Chinese leaders to agree to formation of a semi-autonomous federation of the five Chinese provinces of Hopen, Chahar, Shantung, Shensi and Sulyan.

Meanwhile, stormy weather gave Nanking, China's capital, a respite from Japanese air bombardment.

The comparatively low loss of life in yesterday's bombardment was attributed to Nanking's system of underground shelters available for most of the civilians remaining in the capital

At Hankow and Wuchangs, commercial cities of the middle Yangtze Valley, 303 bodies of Chinese civilians were recovered from debris

Magicians, Theater Men and Colored Club Volunteer in Campaign for School Lunches

Washington's theatrical men, the local chapter of the Society of American Magicians and a club called the Pollyannas yesterday volunteered their aid in the campaign to provide free lunches for the District's 8,000 underfed school children.

Sidney B. Lust has been appointed chairman of the theatrical committee by Mrs. John Boyle jr., organizer of the drive. He announced his acceptance of the appointment yesterday and now is choosing his committee. According to tentative plans, local movie theaters will be asked to turn over a percentage of one evening's receipts to the fund.

Washington's amateur magicians, through their vice president, Charles W. Townsley, have announced plans for a benefit magic show to be held for several days later in October.

"The show naturally will be of a nature to attract children," Frank Buckley of the citizens' committee explained yesterday. "We feel sure the Parent-Teacher Association will indorse the plan, and that Dr. Ballou will be willing to have the show publicized in the schools."

The Pollyannas, a colored organization, expect to raise $1,000 for the lunch fund by staging a pageant October 31 at the Lincoln Colonnade. This decision was announced by Miss Adela G. Park, a member of the group, which consists chiefly of doctors' wives and school teachers.

Another pledge of co-operation in the enterprise came yesterday from Theodore Grape, president of the Federation of Businessmen's Associations, who assured the committee that his organization was wholeheartedly behind the drive.

Buckley, who is in charge of arrangements for the boxing carnival October 11 in Griffith Stadium, has invited his committee and sports writers on Washington newspapers to attend a luncheon today at 12:30 at the Mayflower Hotel. Further

Supreme Court Controversy Is Main Topic as U. S. Bar Association Convenes

Leader Fears Plan to Disarm Lawyer-Critics

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, Sept. 26.—In an atmosphere alive with "off-the-record" talk of President Roosevelt's Supreme Court proposal, the Nation's lawyers crowded into Kansas City tonight for the American Bar Association's sixtieth annual convention.

"It is imposible to forecast any action that might be taken by an assemblage of this size," said the association's president, Frederick H. Stinchfield, of Minneapolis, "but I think you'd be safe in guessing that there'll be a 'Supreme Court atmosphere' throughout the convention."

Approximately 3,500 lawyers will attend the week-long convention.

Stinchfield said today the Roosevelt Administration apparently is determined "to destroy the Supreme Court of the United States as we have heretofore known that court."

He asserted over the radio that an "unequal" struggle is impending "between the President and the lawyers of the United States," appealed for Nation-wide public faith in "our claims of wishing the best of our country," and asserted that any struggle which might arise between the President and the law profession would be unequal because the President has "quite unbelieable powers."

Speculation developed over what recommendations might be contained in a committee report on the court plan, to be made Wednesday by Silvester C. Smith, jr., of Phillipsburg, N. J.

A referendum by the association which showed its membership about 4½ to 1 against the President's proposal, was presented to the Judiciary Committee during the Senate battle.

Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, arch foe of the Supreme Court proposal, will address the convention Thursday night.

More Democratic.

Discussing revisions embodied in a new association constitution adopted last year at Boston, Stinchfield said the bar association is "becoming more democratic instead of autocratic, which seems to be the current political trend."

The new constitution substituted a house of delegates for the old executive committee as the medium for selecting national officers. The house of delegates is composed of elective and appointive representatives from the 48 States and Hawaii.

One of the hottest controversies of the convention is expected to hinge on a committee report on law lists—directories giving names and addresses of attorneys over the country, compiled for the convenience of those needing a lawyer in another city.

Bonding Suggested.

An issue is whether the association should approve bonded lists—which provide protection in case of financial losses suffered through hiring a listed attorney. Opponents would not recognize any necessity for placing attorneys, in effect, under bond.

Awaiting the delegates was the administrative law committee report suggesting a court to hear appeals from governmentaal agencies such as the National Labor Board. Under the present setup such appeals go directly to the Federal Courts of Appeal.

Cherokees to Vote On Road Location

tion and, in large part, whether it is to enter the park at all from the North Carolina side.

Representatives of the Indian Bureau, the Department of the Interior and the National Park Service, together with representatives of the State government, have tried to show the Cherokee chiefs that it would be to the tribe's advantage to give or sell the right of way, since it would bring hundreds of thousands of visitors to the reservation every year. These, it was pointed out to the Indians, would buy their native bead work, pottery, blankets, bow and arrows, and other handiwork.

Attorneys for the Federal and State governments say that either of these governments could invoke the right of eminent domain and take over the needed land, but they have no desire to further aggravate the feeling of distrust among the Cherokees.

Act of Congress Needed.

If the Indians accept the proposals made by the Federal and State governments, they will be paid for the right of way, which, incidentally, will be 200 feet wide and not 800 as was at first proposed. Also the right of way will not cut through valuable farm lands as was at first proposed.

HARRY N. STULL.

Stanton Park Man, Long Active in School Affairs, Now Feels Tax Pressure Makes Ballot Vital.

By Christine Sadler.

Until about a year ago, the chief civic interest of Harry N. Stull, president of Stanton Park Citizens Association and first vice president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, was District school affairs. For six years he headed the education committee of the federation and spent nearly all his after-work hours thinking up ways to better reading, writing and arithmetic conditions in Washington.

Today, however, he thinks all other District problems must play second or third fiddle to that of suffrage—the need for which he believes to have been strengthened considerably by recent budget and taxation happenings.

"I believe the organized citizenship of Washington is completely sympathetic with the group of individuals who have been hardest hit by the gross business receipts tax.

Stresses Vote Issue.

"Although this tax and the increased real estate tax were passed for but one year, the Commissioners already are considering a further increase in the budget. The federation has taken no formal action, but I think the sentiment is going to be very much opposed to any budget increase," he declares.

The impotence of residents to enforce their sentiments and the willingness of Congress "totally to ignore the rights of over a half-million persons in the District" have brought the voting question forcibly to the front, in his opinion.

"Many Washington residents who have heretofore been lukewarm or even openly hostile to any form of local suffrage are coming to view the ballot box as the only known method of solving the serious local problems which now face us."

Expert on Ballot.

Stull is first vice president of the newly formed District of Columbia Suffrage Association and intends to devote much time to furthering its one objective—that of a vote for every Washingtonian who would be qualified to vote if he lived outside the District.

Stull probably knows as much about ballot-casting as any man alive. As a notary public he has helped thousands of the District's citizens get their votes off to some State in time to be counted. But he has never voted, not even once.

He was born in Frederick, Md., and came to the District 46 years ago at the age of 6. He was educated in the Washington schools and has been with the United States Court of Claims for 30 years. He became interested in the work of the citizens' associations around 14 years ago and has been one of the most active leaders since that time.

His association has approximately 250 members. Due to the Stanton Park location so near the Capitol, few localized problems arise, and so the members interest themselves in city-wide matters. Unlike Federation members in other sections, they rarely have to worry about new street lights, pavements, parks or schools.

Personally, their leader is very much interested in extension of community center activities in the District, is a member of Community Center Advisory Council and a delegate to its Interfederation Council.

Interest in District affairs and civic betterment runs in the Stull family. Mr. Stull's wife, Mrs. Blanche J. Stull, is first vice president of the District's Congress of Parents and Teachers. His son, Lester H. Stull, is a District employe. In addition, there are two daughters in the family—Mrs. C. P. Gates, of Annapolis, and Miss Ruth Jane Stull, a student at Eastern High School—and also a 1-year-old granddaughter.

N. Y. Detectives Held As Robbery Suspects

New York, Sept. 26 (U.P.).—Christos Christofis was held up and robbed of $100 today in his restaurant by four men. He trailed the bandits for several blocks and was surprised to see two enter a police station. Christofis followed them in, told the desk sergeant of the robbery and identified two members of the pickpocket squad as part of the gang. The detectives were locked up in their own police station.

German Bishop Urges Boycott on Literature

Berlin, Sept. 26 (U.P.).—German Catholics today were urged in a pastoral letter read in all Catholic churches and chapels to boycott all printed matter which "attempted to destroy God's kingdom by inciting hate against Jesus Christ."

The Bishop of Berlin, Count von Preysing, who issued the letter, asked Catholics to read church papers and periodicals and condemned attacks against the church.

Girl Leaps From House, Charges Plot on Morals

West Lebanon, N. H., Sept. 26 (U.P.). Federal agents today arrested Mrs. Carrie Legassee, 42, on a charge of violating the Mann act and held another woman as a material witness. A pretty waitress, whose name was withheld, told authorities that while working at Augusta, Me., she accepted an offer from Mrs. Legasse to work as hostess in a West Lebanon tearoom. But on arrival here with the older woman, the waitress discovered that she had ben brought to a house of ill-fame, she told Federal agents. The girl said she escaped by jumping from a window.

Reserve Board Broadens Rules To Spur Loans

By Russell Smith.

The Federal Reserve Board yesterday "further implemented" its easy-money policy by broadening its discount and loan rules so as to make eligible for discount a large amount of paper previously ineligible, including that "of commission merchants and finance companies, including paper to finance installment sales of a commercial character."

The board's action was taken under a section of the 1935 banking act, the authority of which had not been exercised previously. The step is embodied in a revision of the board's "Regulation A."

Previously, the board had authorized reductions of discount rates of the several reserve banks, and on September 12 it arranged with the Treasury for release of $300,000,000 of the sterilized gold store, and announced its intention to buy Government securities on the open market in whatever amount it regarded as necessary to care for seasonal increases in the money demand.

Preferred Last Issued.

In addition to announcing specific classes of paper acceptable as collateral for advances by reserve banks, the board yesterday said "the banks may accept as security for an advance any assets satisfactory to the Federal Reserve Bank." It observed that no classes of paper are barred under the revision, but that "a preferred list of paper" is indicated.

"The issuance of the revised regulation at this time," a board statement said, "is an appropriate sequence of the system's recent reduction of discount rates. The regulation further implements the system's policy of monetary ease by liberalizing and consolidating the rules and methods affecting the lending function of the Federal Reserve System.

"In a preface to the regulation, the board states that the guiding principle underlying the discount policy of the Federal Reserve banks is the advancement of the public interest and recognizes that the lending function of the Federal Reserve banks is not automatic but is an instrumentality of the system's general credit policy.

"The regulation makes few changes in the technical rules for eligibility which have prevailed since the system was established. . . .

"The regulation lists specifically the following clauses of assets which may be accepted as collateral for advances by Federal Reserve banks: Securities defined by the Comptroller of the Currency as eligible for investment by national banks, loans on stocks made in compliance with the board's Regulation U, mortgages and loans insured under Titles 1 or 2 of the national housing act, debentures and bonds issued by Federal Home Loan banks or under authority of the Federal farm loan act, bills, notes and revenue bonds and warrants issued by States or other political subdivisions, obligations issued or drawn for the purpose of financing real estate, and obligations issued for the purpose of financing the sale of goods on an installment basis.

No Class Barred.

"In addition to the specified classes of assets, the regulation provides further that, when in the judgment of a Federal Reserve Bank circumstances make it advisable to do so, the banks may accept as security for an advance any assets satisfactory to the Federal Reserve Bank. The regulation, therefore, bars no class of paper from use as collateral for advances but merely indicates a preferred list of paper which covers all the principal fields of financing.

"By describing in the regulation the character of paper that will have first claim for advances the board hopes to encourage better and safer banking practices. At the same time the board believes that the assurance of support in case of need given to member banks whose lending and investment practices comply with the minimum standards laid down by the board will encourage the banks to give their communities the financial services that they require."

Pan-Hellenic Group Hostess at Affair in Raleigh as Sororities Open Activities; More Events Scheduled Sunday.

The rushing season for George Washington University sororities opened formally yesterday with the Pan-Hellenic tea at the Raleigh Hotel. Of the 500 girls who attended, about half were "rushees," and the rest members of the university's dozen sororities.

Smartly gowned and intent on making a good impression, the freshmen chatted and drank tea in the Raleigh's ballroom, in which large tables were reserved for each sorority.

To facilitate introductions, each of the first-year students wore a slip of paper with her name written on it.

Chairman of the tea was Miss Susan Slater, president of the Chi Omega Sorority and this year's beauty queen of the university. She was assisted by a committee consisting of Miss Geraldine Dillman, of Zeta Tau Alpha, and Miss Carolyn Watson, of Alpha Delta Pi.

In the receiving line were the Misses Geraldine Dillman, of Zeta Tau Alpha; Kitty Baart, of Alpha Delta Theta; Eleanor Livingston, president of the Pan-Hellenic Association; Marie Joroleman, of Pi Beta Phi; Mary Gloria Morrison, of Kappa Delta; Kathleen Bulow, of Kappa Kappa Gamma; Mary Martin, of Phi Mu; Estelle Weinstein, of Phi Sigma Sigma; Ruth Ashburn, of Beta Phi Alpha, and Catherine Lepish, of Sigma Kappa.

The faculty was represented by Mrs. Vinnie Barrows, dean of women.

This week the sororities will send out bids to the individual teas which they will hold Sunday.

200 Police Sworn In Truck Strike

Hartford, Conn., Sept. 26 (U.P.).—Mayor Thomas J. Spellacy today deputized 200 special policemen "to preserve law and order by all the force that is necessary" in the strike of eastern Connecticut truck drivers, helpers and mechanics.

The mayor swore in the special officers after sporadic rioting had resulted in injuries to one truck driver and the stoning of a truck.

The strike, called 19 days ago by an American Federation of Labor union, has brought a railroad embargo on freight billed for pick-up and delivery service at Hartford. The union demanded a 10 per cent wage increase, a closed shop and longer running time between Hartford and New York.

District Levy Is Third Over Previous Year

Better Business, Heavier Taxes Share Credit for Boost.

A rising tide of business and heavier taxes poured $4,653,000,000 into the Federal Treasury in the last fiscal year, an increase of $1,132,987,000 over the previous tax year, the Bureau of Internal Revenue announced last in its annual report on revenue collections.

In the District alone, one-third more was paid in Federal taxes than in 1936, the Bureau said.

The 32.2 per cent increase in total collections reflected an individual income tax gain of 62 per cent, an increase which was attributed by some officials in some degree to operation of the undivided surplus tax on corporations.

They said the tax tended to stimulate distribution of dividends, thereby increasing taxable income in the hands of security holders.

Revenue gathered from corporations, however, jumped 43 per cent and income taxes altogether made up more than half, or 52 per cent, of all revenue taken in.

Security Taxes Mount.

Collections from social security and carriers act taxes which were but $48,279 in the previous fiscal year, rose in the last year to $265,745,308, as the social security act was put into full operation. On the debit side of such special taxes, however, $71,637,200 of agricultural adjustment taxes were received in 1936 which were absent in the 1937 fiscal year.

"The increase of $1,133,000,000 in total collections for the fiscal year 1937 as compared with the fiscal year 1936," said Commissioner Guy T. Helvering in his letter of transmittal to Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, "reflects continued improvement in business, changed provisions and higher rates of taxes applicable with respect to individual and corporation incomes and estates, and the new levies upon pay rolls (social security taxes)."

He also said that refunds of taxes during the year amounted to $38,701,820.

Other Sources Listed.

Of the other tax sources, these were some of the important ones listed:

Tobacco manufactures taxes increased 10.2 per cent to $552,254,145.

Gift taxes fell off 85 per cent to $23,811,183.

Estate taxes increased 28.7 per cent to $281,584,100.

Distilled spirits and wine taxes increased 22 per cent to $312,661,000.

Fermented malt liquors taxes increased 13 per cent to $281,585,000.

Manufacturers excise taxes on gasoline and lubricating oil increased 11.5 per cent to $227,995,115.

For the District of Columbia, collections of all taxes yielded $23,048,450, as compared with $17,322,929. This represents an increase of $5,725,521, or a fraction over 33 per cent.

Of the 1937 total, the District's individual income tax payers contributed $9,769,220, and corporations here $5,852,150, or $15,621,376 in all income taxes. District estate taxes amounted to $3,508,300.

Virginia's taxes paid during the 1937 fiscal year were $176,368,480, as compared with $150,333,865 in 1936, whereas in Maryland the payments rose from $63,308,065 to $89,579,996, the bureau also showed.

Air Attacks on Civilians Called Tactical Blunder

By the Associated Press.

Aerial bombardment of civilian populations may be a tactical blunder, in the opinion of American military experts.

The Infantry Journal, edited by Lieut. Col. E. F. Harding, of the United States Infantry Association, says currently that punishment of noncombatants is both ineffective and unwise.

"If the military profession," says the article, "is inclined to resort to mere punishment as a mode of prosecuting war, it will do well to refer to . . . knowledge in the field of penology, where will be found abundant proof that brutality of punishment has never been effective as a deterrent to the human will, but rather a provocative stimulus.

"In the first place, if attack upon civilian populations were effective in destroying will to resist, such attack did not have to await advent of the airplane.

"It always has been possible, yet, as the result of painful experience, the race had learned, before the aeromaniacs frightened it out of its wits, that such attack was both ineffective and unwise. Hence the well-known and formerly respected rules of land warfare."

"It is desperately necessary," the article continues, "to impress upon the minds of all who are thinking about . . . war, that the determination of a people to prosecute a war is dependent not at all upon the punishment to which the people is subjected, but upon two things:

(1). Its belief in the justice of the cause, and (2) its belief that it has a fair chance of winning, or in any case, of avoiding defeat."

"The nation that is wise," it declares in conclusion, "will go out of its way to avoid attack on civilian population, in the hope that the great force of moral opprobrium may fall upon its less astute enemy."

Chamber Asks Fairfax Groups To Joint Parley

Plans are being made by the Fairfax County Chamber of Commerce for an all-day organization conference to be held in Willard Hall at Fairfax on October 8.

Mrs. Florence Jodzies, secretary, states that each organization in Fairfax County, of either county-wide or local community scope, is invited to attend. The conference will open at 10 a. m. and continue until 3 p. m., with complimentary luncheon served by a committee of ladies of the chamber at noon.

The general purpose of the meeting, in addition to good fellowship, is to exchange information concerning aims and programs of the organizations, and to co-ordinate meeting schedules. The program will also include aspirational and practical talks on phases of organization work and county activities, particularly those connected with the health, schools, Government, and roads.

Mrs. Lennig Sweet, of Fairfax, is acting as chairman of the luncheon committee and will be assisted by Mrs. John S. Barbour, Mrs. Mary Walton McCandlish, Mrs. Paul E. Brown, Mrs. W. J. Cleveland, Mrs. F. D. Richardson, Mrs. Omer L. Hirst, Mrs. J. E. Staub, Mrs. Edwin Lynch, Mrs. W. T. Woodson, Mrs. John M. Whalen, and Miss Lucy Blake.

Each organization planning to send representatives is asked to notify the secretary in advance.

Naval Records Hold Valuable U. S. History

Many-sided lessons, extending into the field of politics, economics and foreign relations, are being revealed by the publication of early United States naval documents by the Navy Department.

Four of the series of seven volumes have already come from the presses. The three others will be printed at intervals during the course of the next few years.

Under the title "Naval Documents" the series will furnish students with source materials on the history of the "quasi-war" with France, which took place from 1798 until 1801.

President Roosevelt wrote of them that "the many-sided lessons locked up in old naval manuscripts are well worthy of public attention. Our early naval and maritime history is closely associated with the country's pioneer settlement and expansion, with the winning of its independence and with its subsequent security in very precarious times."

In a letter to the Navy Department, Dr. James Brown Scott, director of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, said, "To those who read them it must seem strange that within a few years after the independence of the United States had been gained through the participation of France, we Americans should have engaged in 'informal' hostilities with a former ally."

Pugh Impounds Slot Machines In Montgomery

State's Attorney James H. Pugh yesterday ordered all slot machines in Montgomery County confiscated by police pending decision by the Circuit Court on their legality. The order did not affect pin ball machines or machines operated with a plunger where a degree of skill is necessary.

The State's attorney walked into a Bethesda store to make a purchase, and as he stood at the counter, a group of men were placing bets on a horse race machine in the store.

"I could not ignore such an apparent violation of the law," Mr. Pugh said, "and I ordered the machine confiscated." The machine in question was one in which a series of metal horses actuated by a coin move to a finish line, the first one arriving being the winner.

No Test of Skill.

"There was no skill involved as far as I could see," Mr. Pugh said. "The machine was operated mechanically without any plunger or pin ball action. I feel that clearly it is in violation of the law against operation of gambling machines.

"It is my intention to forestall gambling in this county so long as I am State's attorney. I do not intend that my successor be embarrassed by any entrenched gambling in this county. The rorse racing machines and a new machine which recently was placed around and which is merely a modernization of the jackpot slot machine are in violation of the law, I have held."

County police raided a number of stores in the county and captured about a dozen of the machines which had been banned by Pugh. The policemen played each machine before taking it into custody. No arrests were made.

Will File Plaint.

Pugh explained that he intends filing a petition in the name of Chief of Police J. William Garrett with the county circuit court, asking permission of the court to confiscate and destroy the machines, including a capture made at the home of the late Eddie Killeen, who was shot and killed recently.

The owners of the machines will be given an opportunity to demonstrate any contention that the machines are legal before the court, Pugh said.

If the court decides the machines are legal, they will be returned to their owners. Otherwise they will be destroyed, Pugh said.

Pugh said that he had ruled that claw machines are machines requiring a certain amount of skill and therefore are legal under the terms of the pin ball machine licensing law.

Wrong Classification.

All of the machines confiscated had been licensed by the clerk of the circuit court and bore the tag indicating such issuance but they were listed as pin ball machines, Pugh said, and therefore had been incorrectly classified in obtaining the licenses.

Pugh several years ago issued a stringent order directing police to arrest any person operating any game of chance or gambling device of any kind including those in operation at firemen and church carnivals. Even his own church had to cancel plans to operate paddle machines and bingo stands at its carnival as the result of the order. The General Assembly subsequently amended the gambling law to permit such games when operated by a charitable group or fraternal order for the benefit of charity or the funds of the group involved.

By the Associated Press.

Representative Jennings Randolph, Elkins, W. Va., Democrat, said yesterday the United States is pledged to "a strict policy of nonintervention and neutrality."

Randolph spoke over the radio during a program dedicated to the Gold Star Mothers.

"For the mothers of America, we are determined to preserve and guarantee those blessings by a strict policy of nonintervention and neutality," he said.

Hit-Run Auto Kills Md. Man; One Dead Here

Ednor Farmer Dragged 65 Feet, Damaged Car Sought.

Two men were killed and 12 others injured in traffic week-end accidents.

The body of John E. Jenkins, 28-year-old Ednor, Md., farmer, was found on the North Colesville road early yesterday morning, apparently killed by a hit-run-driver. Shattered headlight glass on the road led police to broadcast a lookout for a Ford with broken lenses.

Jenkins had been dragged about 65 feet, according to State Police Corpl. James R. Miller, who was investigating the case. Dr. H. H. Howlett, acting coroner, at an inquest said Jenkins had been killed several hours before the body was found.

Jenkins was seen about 1 a. m. by A. B. Cooper, of Ednor, 3 miles from the spot where his body was discovered by a colored farmer who notified police. Jenkins was identified by an aunt, Mrs. Rose Yell, of Ednor.

Motorcycles, Car Crash.

Eugene C. Dowell, 24, of 628 Sligo avenue, Silver Spring, Md., died last night of injuries suffered in an automotorcycle crash near Fredericksburg, Va.

Dowell was fatally injured in a crash involving two motorcycles and an automobile which resulted in injuries to three others on the Orange turnpike, 7 miles north of Fredericksburg.

He was operating one of the motorcycles when it crashed into the rear of an automobile on the crowded pike. His wife, Gertrude, 21, was riding behind him.

Dowell suffered a fractured leg, fractured skull, broken jaw, and cuts. His wife suffered cuts on the head and right arm.

Raymond C. Hall, 26, of Burnleys, Va., was operating a motorcycle behind Dowell, with Miss Margaret Ayres, 18, of Fredericksburg, as a passenger. He piled into Dowell's wrecked motorcycle, sprawling Hall and Miss Ayres on the highway. He suffered cuts on the head, and Miss Ayres a fractured pelvis.

The injured were taken to the Mary Washington Hospital in Fredericksburg.

Boy Slightly Hurt.

Five-year-old William J. Gore, of Berwyn, Md., was struck by a car as he walked out of Providence Hospital where he had been visiting his mother. His condition was not serious and he was allowed to go home.

Police said the automobile was operated by Harry N. Sher, 102 North Carolina avenue southeast. Sher said the boy ran into the street from behind a parked car.

Grant Reddish, 70, 214 Upshur street northwest, was struck by an automobile at Benning and Bladensburg roads northeast. He was treated at Gallinger Hospital for lacerations to his scalp, and shock.

A collision between a bus and a passenger car sent four occupants of the automobile to hospitals, two with injuries that may be serious.

The automobile was operated by Robert H. Herring, 26, 522 Raleigh street southeast, who was charged with reckless driving at the Fifth Precinct. The accident occurred at Eleventh and G streets southeast.

Man, Wife Injured.

Herring and his wife, Lillian, 28, were injured. Herring and his brother, Charles, 20, were treated at Providence Hospital for cuts and bruises. Mrs. Herring and Lennie Cushole, 29, of Hyattsville, Md., were treated at Casualty Hospital for head injuries. Their conditions were said to be undetermined.

Two persons were brought to Georgetown Hospital early yesterday following a collision on Pershing drive in Arlington County, Va.

Allen Sherertz, 26, 1425 Chapin street northwest, was treated for lacerations to the face and head, and Myra Dick, 24, of Vienna, Va., suffered a broken collar bone and cuts. Both were released from the hospital.

Joseph W. Williams, 28, of Asheville, N. C., was treated at Casualty Hospital for internal injuries and shock. He was brought in from Bladensburg, Md., where police said he fell from a car.

Arthur Smithwick, 20, 1103 C street southeast, and Eno Zell, 18, 1330 East Capitol street, were brought to Casualty Hospital for treatment after a motorcycle they were riding ran off the Marlboro pike.

Smithwick received a fractured left hand and cuts. His companion was treated for minor cuts and bruises.

Joshua Hazel, colored, 10, was knocked down by an automobile while crossing Rhode Island avenue at Seventh street northwest. At Freedmen's Hospital she was treated for minor cuts.

Reds on Payroll As C.I.O. Aides, Frey Declares

A. F. L. Officer Also Says Labor Board Sided With John Lewis.

By the Associated Press.

Denver, Sept. 26.—John P. Frey, president of the A. F. L. Metal Trades Department, charged tonight that Communists were on the C. I. O. pay roll as organizers and that Communists officered a large number of C. I. O. unions.

In a report to his department's annual convention, Frey also accused the National Labor Relations Board of siding with John L. Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization in labor's civil war.

The Communists, Frey said, had followed their "successful infiltration" of the C. I. O. with an effort to bore into A. F. L. locals.

Policy Condemned.

"During the year, as a result of this Communist influence, supplemented by activities of the C. I. O., a number of A. F. L. locals adopted resolutions condemning the policy of the A. F. L., of President William Green, the executive council and many other responsible trade union officials," Frey said.

The communists, led by William Z. Foster, started their work in steel even before Lewis launched his campaign, Frey said. In the auto industry, he said, William Weinstone, American representative of the executive committee, Communist International in Moscow, was in command.

Cites C. I. O. Election.

Regarding the labor board, Frey said the board's order for an A. F. of L.-C. I. O. election in the National Electric Products Co.'s Ambridge, Pa., plant, after that company had signed a closed-shop contract with the A. F. of L., was "a most severe blow to collective bargaining."

Frey proposed amendment of the Wagner act to remove from the board the authority to determine whether a craft or industrial union was "the appropriate collective bargaining unit" for a given group of workmen.

Strength Need Appreciated.

Princeton, N. J., Sept. 26.—John L. Lewis asserted today that labor was convinced it must possess effective strength in the economic as well as political field "for use without reserve, if necessary, in the great battle for humanity and genuine democracy."

Writing the current issue of the Public Opinion, quarterly of Princeton University, where his son, John L. Lewis, jr., is enrolled this year, the Committee for Industrial Organization chief said: "The great majority of industrial workers of today find that political freedom without industrial democracy is meaningless."

Beale Street Blues Queen Killed in Auto Crash

Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 26 (AP).—Show folk on Memphis' famed Beale street today mourned the death of Bessie Smith, the "queen" of blues singers.

In 1917 Bessie sang the blues in a Beale street show house, attracted attention of Eastern theatrical agents and soon was famous. Two weeks ago she returned to Memphis to join the "Broadway Rastus" show on Beale street. Early today an automobile in which she was riding overturned, killing the 50-year-old singer.

N. Y. Maritime Council Receives C. I. O. Charter

New York, Sept. 26 (AP).—Signaling the opening of a drive to line up 100,000 marine and harbor workers of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts the Committee for Industrial Organization issued an industrial charter today to the New York maritime council, a federation of eight marine and harbor unions.

Thomas Ray, secretary of the council, said it was the first such charter to be issued in the history of marine labor to a group of related maritime crafts. Component bodies of the council comprise C. I. O., A. F. of L. and independent unions alike.

'Sleeping Pat' In Hospital for Vital Operation

Maguire Beauty, in Coma 5 Years, Facing Removal of Tumor.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 26.—Patricia Maguire entered Presbyterian Hospital today in preparation for a new crisis—more important to her than any of the events which have passed unheeded by the "sleeping beauty" since, February, 1932.

Mrs. Gladys Hansen, sister of "Pat," said the 31-year-old sleeping sickness victim was "very critically ill." She termed the situation "crucial."

Specialists decided that Miss Maguire must undergo an operation for removal of an abdominal tumor. A long period of indecision over whether to risk the operation was ended yesterday with the family's announcement they had concurred in the doctors' plan.

Roosevelt Ends Rest to Invade Borah's Idaho

President Encounters Own Economies and Reopens Yellowstone Hotel.

Roosevelt will re-enter the territory of recalcitrant Democratic Senators on the start of his return East.

Mr. Roosevelt tonight received a visit from a delegation of the Tri-State Yellowstone Park Civic Association with a petition to rescind an Interior Department order closing Yellowtsone Park after today to all travel as a part of the economy movement. Unless the order is rescinded, it will be the first time the park has been closed except by weather conditions. Closing of the park is said to mean a loss of approximately $100,000 in tourist business to surrounding communities in Montana, Idaho and Wyoming.

The order closing the park constitutes an illuminating illustration of the course Federal economy is taking. In the first place, it is contended here, the park this year is more than self-sustaining, collecting in revenue close to $460,000 from automobile license permits and other sources. With 500,000 visitors to the park this season, all records have been broken.

Net Saving, $2,000.

The Yellowstone Park appropriation for this fiscal year was $411,000. This has been ordered cut 10 per cent as an ecenomy measure. By closing the park for the winter now, approximately $6,000 will be saved, it is said.

Against that saving, the park will lose estimated receipts of $4,000—so the net saving is said here to be about $2,000.

Meanwhile, quite a few tourists who would like to see the park in its gorgeous autumnal colors, and a large number of fishing enthusiasts would be denied that pleasure, not to speak of the loss in tourist business to railroads, hotels and nearby towns.

But that is not the whole story. Large hotels in the park were closed several weeks ago, their equipment stored and their staffs sent away for the winter. Mammoth Hotel thus had to be reopened to care for the Presidential party for two days and one night. Servants were brought back hundreds of miles, rooms refurnished and fires started. All this is said to have cost approximately $2,500, which is a loss that the hotel concessionaire must stand. It gives an ironical twist to this economy talk. As one correspondent observed: "Santa Claus has come down his own chimney."

Farm Payments On Government Loans Show Rise

By the Associated Press.

W. I. Myers, governor of the Farm Credit Administration, said yesterday there was a steady upward trend in farmers' payments of interest and principal on mortgage indebtedness.

"The FCA," he said, "wrote 'paid in full' on 25,113 farmers' mortgages during the 12 months ended September 1, or an increase of more than 60 per cent over the preceding 12 months."

Farmers paid $39,213,091 of regular principal installments and special payments on Federal Land Bank loans during the last 12 months period, which was 83.2 per cent of the amount of principal that ordinarily would have matured. Such payments in the preceding 12 months amounted to $28,875,033, which was a ratio of 83.7 per cent.

August Stock Sale 22.9% Below 1936

By the Associated Press.

The Securities Exchange Commission reported yesterday the dollar value of sales on the 22 national securities exchanges in August was $1,277,583,486, a decrease of 9.8 per cent from July and a drop of 22.9 per cent below the same month a year ago.

August was the last of a series of slow trading months before this month's nervous trading rocketed the volume up to near record figures on some days.

Stock sales totaled $1,119,357,535 for 38,563,248 shares, and bond sales $158,163,672 for bonds with a face value of $187,458,075. Compared with July, stock sales declined 9.9 per cent in dollar values and 7.9 per cent in shares, while bond sales dropped 8.9 per cent in sales value and 9.5 per cent in volume.

Sheriff Forgets 'Guests' He Locked in Jail Cell

Chadron, Nebr., Sept. 26 (AP).—Sheriff William Moody was the county's most eligible candidate for a memory course today. Two men came from Alliance to visit their brother, in jail on Federal charges. Sheriff Moody admitted them to the cell.

Then the sheriff left for Crawford to attend a meeting, forgetting about the visitors, who began to fidget as time passed. Hours later Sheriff Moody remembered his two extra "guests," and telephoned his wife to free them.

3 Painters in Hotel Room Make Art as Clear as Mud to Press

Informal Symposium Is Held Here by American, Frenchman and Italian; Differ on Future of Creative Work.

An informal international symposium on art was held yesterday in a Mayflower Hotel bedroom, where an American, a Frenchman and an Italian tried to explain to reporters the artistic status of their respective nations.

The American was Homer Saint-Gaudens, son of the illustrious sculptor and at present director of the Carnegie Institute fine arts department in Pittsburgh. With him were Raoul Dufy, Parisian landscape painter, and Ferruclo Ferrazzi, of Rome, a prominent mural painter. Dufy and Ferrazzi are on their way home after acting as judges for the 1937 Carnegie International Exhibition of Paintings.

Speaking for America, Saint-Gaudens said the development of photography has more or less destroyed the trend toward realism. Still and motion pictures have satisfied the Nation's desire for naturalistic scenes and they look to painters to supply the fantasy and dreaminess, he said.

Abstract painting is in the ascendancy, he believes. "Artists are taking designs one is used to seeing on window curtains or carpets and making paintings from them. And it's a fine thing. Take a good-looking cocktail bar with fine paneling and decorate it with abstract paintings and it looks fine. But this trend isn't fighting at all with such academic portrait painters as Hopkinson; it's just a different phase."

Dufy's most recent claim to fame is a mural depicting the history of electricity, which he painted for the Paris Exposition. He furnished a profoundly philosophical argument on why we cannot judge the value of contemporary art. "To evaluate an artist, one must compare him with the future, not the past or the present, and that is difficult. The artist who revolts us today may be greeted with acclaim by the future."

In Italy, according to Ferrazzi, who like the others spoke only in French, the trend everywhre is toward the social function of art. Buildings, fresco work and all types of decoration have developed a great deal in the last ten years, he feels. The emphasis is on composition and technique as compared with the impressions of the last generation.

With the present regime encouraging young artists, Ferrazzi feels hopeful for the future—this despite Dufy, who feels that no amount of encouragement will bring artistic advance if the artists themselves are not born with genius.

The conclusion of the resulting argument still remains in doubt, for by this time the Frenchman and the Italian were waving their hands so violently and talking the foreign tongue so fast that the press lost the drift of the conversation.

Former Bricklayer Awarded Coveted Architects' Scholarship

Joseph Victor Keyes, 28-year-old draftsman in the PWA Housing Division who started studying architecture as a union bricklayer, has been awarded an Edward Langley Scholarship by the American Institution of Architects for a year's study in Europe, Edwin Bergstrom, treasurer of the institute announced yesterday.

Keyes, one of eight to receive scholarships, graduated from the University of Pennsylvania as Bachelor of Architecture two years ago, and this year received his master's degree in architecture.

Born in Madison, Wisc., Keyes worked as bricklayer for three years in New York, and later was employed in the office of the supervising architect, Procurement Division, United States Treasury. At present his home is in Arlington, Va.

A specialist in design and construction, he will study at the American Institute in Rome, with field trips for sketching architecture in Greece, France, Germany, Sweden, Finland and England.

Keyes was proposed for the competition by Angelo Robert Clas, Washington architect, as a candidate "whose intention to make a profession of architecture his life endeavor is sincere, whose character and reputation command respect in his community, and whose qualifications and achievements have demonstrated outstanding ability in his chosen work."

Keyes was awarded second mention by the American Institute of Architects in the 1937 competition for the LeBrun traveling scholarship.

Bandit Gets $400 At Hagerstown

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Sept. 26.—A stolen automobile, in which a lone bandit who yesterday held up a wholesale liquor store employe is believed to have fled the scene, was found abandoned today here. Police saw a connection between the holdup on a busy street here and the theft of the automobile an hour before and had established a blockade of all highways within a few minutes after the holdup of Lawrence Bender, an employe of Alex J. Mandl, Inc.

Bender, en route to the bank with the day's receipts of $400 in cash and $600 in checks, was forced into his automobile by the armed bandit, who kept a revolver in his ribs as he compelled Bender to drive by a circuitous route.

Ireton Assails Reds and Fascists Before Holy Name Society.

By the Associated Press.

Harrisonburg, Va., Sept. 26.—Bishop Peter L. Ireton, of Richmond, told the closing session of the seventeenth annual Virginia Holy Name Society today there is no room for fascism and communism in America.

The speaker said, "we must admit Communist propaganda is being spread in the country," but that this is being done by foreign-born persons who "took their oath of allegiance to the flag very lightly."

"I am optimistic," Bishop Ireton said. "These 'shirted' factions will cause no grave danger to America, but they can give us an awful lot of trouble in rioting. Our traditional Americanism will prevail."

The convention, attended by 700 Holy Name members from all parts of the State and nearby West Virginia, elected Henry L. Caravati, Richmond, who is executive administrative officer of the Virginia Unemployment Compensation Commission, as president. He succeeds Walter Murphy, of Lynchburg.

St. Benedict's parish, of Richmond, will be host to the convention next year.

Bund's Intent Is Patriotic, Leader Avers

Critics Invited to Visit New Jersey Center Next Year.

By the Associated Press.

Andover, N. J., Sept. 26.—A parade of 1,000 uniformed men, women and children goose-stepping to the heils of 20,000 persons marked the end today of the first season of the German-American Volksbund at Camp Nordland.

The largest throng of the year, massed on the grounds of the camp, target of attacks by veterans and other organizations as "Nazi and un-American," heard National Bundsfuehrer Fritz Kuhn proclaim the "determination of the bund to continue its fight for Americanism until America is controlled by Americans and not by a bunch of Russian-controlled Jews."

American flags outnumbered Swastikas today in the buildings and on the grounds of the woodland camp, nestled in the hills of Sussex, as ground was broken for the construction of a $40,000 building for next season.

The women were praised highly by Kuhn for efforts in building the organization and rearing their children "as true American mothers," teaching them to combat "any un-American revolution in this country."

Kuhn asked the bundsters to contribute to a fund for the center building, declaring: "Instead of spending 40 cents in Jewish movie houses it would be much better to give the money to the fund."

Then speaking in English, Kuhn criticized Samuel Untermyer, of New York, anti-Nazi leader, and Representative Charles Dickstein (Democrat), New York, who has called for investigations of German-American activities in the United States.

An "invitation" by Kuhn to Untermyer and Dickstein to visit the camp "some time and talk to its people" brought a thunder of boos from the crowd.

"We won't stand for any dirt being thrown at Germany—a country which we honor," he declared.

85 Sailors Desert Loyalist Warship

Falmouth, England, Sept. 26 (AP).—The Spanish government destroyer Jose Luis Diez sailed toward Spain tonight, leaving behind 85 members of her crew in the custody of British police.

The Spanish seamen, accompanied by numerous officers, deserted when the 1,650-ton destroyer put into port for repairs after suffering severe damage when insurgent planes bombed Gijon on the north Spanish coast. A spokesman for the crew declared they were not insurgent sympathizers but were only "tired of war."

Pope, Pacelli Confer Before Swiss Vacation

Castel Gondolfo, Italy, Sept. 26 (AP).—Pope Pius today received Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli, papal secretary of state, for an hour-long conversation prior to the latter's departure this evening on what has been termed a vacation trip.

Cardinal Pacelli will go to Rorschach, on Lake Constance, Switzerland. Prelates denied he would visit Germany, as has been rumored lately.

Irish Poet, in U. S., Snorts at Modern Verse

New York, Sept. 26 (AP).—Seamus McManus, the Irish poet and renowned "Schannachie" from Donegal, arived here today on the Anchor liner Cameronia with a snort through his billowing whiskers for modern poetry and a plea for preservation of Celtic folklore.

McManus, here for a lecture tour, had nothing but pessimism for the world in general and modern verse in particular. "It has gone crazy," he said of the poetry. "The world, he said, "is insane."

Jew Calls Hull 'Spineless' to Nazi 'Traitors'

Challenge of Propaganda Unanswered, Untermyer Tells Veterans.

By the Associated Press

Asbury Park, N. J., Sept. 26.—In an angry denunciation of Secretary of State Cordell Hull as "spineless," Samuel Untermyer, of New York, demanded today that the United States take a stand against what he termed the "open challenge" of the Nazi government's intention to propagandize in this country.

In a speech prepared for the annual convention of Jewish war veterans here, Untedmyer, a prominent attorney and civic leader, referred to pro-Nazi Germans as "hyphenated poltroons," and added:

". . . Acts of treachery, abetted and supported by a foreign country with which we fondly delude ourselves that we are at peace whilst it is overwhelming our country with false propaganda intended to poison the minds of our citizens have been going on for years."

Calls Hull "Spineless."

"The trouble," he went on, "with us has been that, in our feverish and laudable anxiety to preserve world peace, our mild-mannered, spineless Secretary of State has been sacrificing our dignity.

"It is high time that we took a stand, such as we were finally forced to assume just prior to our entry into the World War, when our country was infested with criminal conspiracies under the protecting wing of the ambassadorial cloak."

Untermyer said that on cards advertising a "German day" meeting in New York "these people have had the temerity to desecrate our flag by prominently imprinting the swastika on the face of the flag."

Has Map of Activities.

He added he had a map showing "the Nazi camps and 'cells' in the United States at which . . . traitorous activities are being conducted."

"The term, 'cell,' as used by the Nazis, means a single group or organization, such as a 'bund' or society. The 'bund' indicates such an organization as the 'friends of new Germany.'"

He went on to say that from "a confidential source" he had learned the Nazis recently had issued a decree that Jews, German, and foreign alike, "are to be entirely excluded from all institutions such as parks, gymnastic fields, restaurants and all places that are not immediately necessary for medical treatment or where the possibility of separate treatment of Jews is not given.

The way best to combat the Nazis, he said, was to "intensify the boycott of German goods and services."

Wooden Idol 'Walks' To Reassure Shanghai

Shanghai, Sept. 26 (AP).—Reports of a "miracle foretelling a Chinese victory" ran through the Chinese Nantao quarter of Shanghai tonight.

The report was that the Nantao City God, a huge wooden image, appeared in the street, went to the Chapei area to comfort Chinese troops, then returned to his place at Nantao Temple.

Many Chinese rushed into the temple and found the god unmoved. These declared, however, that there was "evidence of his departure and return."

U. S. Pursuing Middle Course On Neutrality

By the Associated Press.

The United States Government clung warily yesterday to a middle course amid conflicting demands that it invoke the neutrality act in the Chinese-Japanese conflict and that it refrain from doing so.

Vigorously advocating imposition of the law are six organized peace societies which contend that the alternative is eventual American involvement in the undeclared war. They have made repeated pleas to President Roosevelt to apply the statute.

Opposing such action are numerous groups in this country and China which argue that invocation of the law would weaken China and strengthen Japan, with consequent damage to American interests and prestige in the Far East. This attitude was summed up by the American community at Canton, China, which yesterday urged Secretary Hull by cable not to impose the law.

Thus far, the opponents have found a source of satisfaction in the fact that the neutrality law has not yet been formally proclaimed. But the other side interprets as some concession to them the action of President Roosevelt three weeks ago in ordering a partial embargo on arms shipments to both China and Japan.

Government-owned merchant ships were forbidden to transport arms and munitions to the war zone, and other American vessels were warned that if they attempted to do so they must proceed at their own risk.

The neutrality act itself would prohibit any shipments of munitions from this country to belligerents, ban American financial assistance to them and empower the President to forbid American ships to transport to nations at war any commodities which he might designate.

Under the act, the President is called upon to proclaim it effective when he finds a state of war exists.

Franco, Jolted In Aragon, Hits Hard at Toledo

Madrid Troops Are Driven to Second Line; Gains Made in North.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Sept. 26.—A violent insurgent attack on government lines just outside Toledo, 40 miles southwest of Madrid, and important government gains on the Aragon front, close to the Franco-Spanish frontier, were reported at government military headquarters here today.

Insurgent troops outside Toledo were said to have battered government positions with fierce artillery barrages, tanks, armored cars and airplane bombardments, with only small gains. The government troops, fighting fiercely, fell back to secondary lines and, with the aid of reinforcements, stood fast.

From the other area of combat, north of Huesca in northeast Spain, came reports that government troops were trying to cut off Jaca, just a few miles south of the French border, and already had fought their way across the Gallego River, taking at least two positions on its bank.

The railroad linking Huesca and the insurgent stronghold, Zaragoza, was said to have been cut. Immediate government objectives were the highways to the north and south of Jaca. Success in taking them would leave the insurgents connected with the French border only in the Irun sector.

An important powder factory was reported captured at Orna, along with 300 prisoners near Jabarrela.

"It is no exaggeration to say our north Aragon offensive is a real disaster for the insurgents," the jubilant government communique asserted.

after yesterday's Japanese air raids. A total of 489 injured were reported in the two cities.

French Building Damaged.

Besides the $1,000,000 power plant, buildings damaged at Nanking included the headquarters of the French Havas News Agency and the German Transocean headquarters, with its valuable radio equipment. The United Press office was reported slightly damaged.

The Japanese naval attache offered as excuse for Japan's repeated bombardment of Chinese civilians a citation of The Hague air convention of 1923 which, he said, sanctioned such bombardment when civilians live near military objectives.

"Bombing of noncombatants," he said, "will not be carried out except for the destruction of highly important military positions. Even then, when civilians must be bombed, every precaution will be taken by the Japanese navy to lessen the loss of lives."

Planes Held "Sacrificed."

Honda said that in trying to protect foreigners and noncombatants in yesterday's air raids on Nanking, Japanese pilots "made many sacrifices by diving lower than usual" and hence becoming targets for antiaircraft guns. Loss of two Japanese planes was admitted.

In Shanghai, foreign relief officials said the situation of a half-million Chinese refugees from outlying districts was becoming increasingly acute.

Refugees were packed into every available shelter. In refugee camps they sleep on the ground and receive small doles of rice and vegetables. Conditions threatened the spread of cholera and other diseases.

The Japanese navy announced that Japanese warships took possession of islands off the port of Wenchow, 200 miles south of Shanghai, and established a base for possible troop landings in the area.

For the first time in the present warfare a member of the Emperor's imperial family was wounded in action. Prince Hiroyoshi Fushimi, commander of a Japanese destroyer flotilla, suffered a slight wound during an artillery engagement between Japanese warships and Chinese land batteries.

Northwest Invasion Gains.

Peiping, Sept. 26 (AP).—Japanese reported tonight that their troops in West Hopeh Province had broken through the inner Great Wall in a drive toward a Chinese troop concentration at Yenmen Pass, in Shansi Province.

The reports said 80,000 Chinese troops, "including many Communists," were massed to resist the Japanese drive. A major battle appeared imminent.

On another northwestern front, Japanese were said to have fought their way through a rugged mountain pass in northwest Shansi Province to capture Liangcheng, only 40 miles from Kweisui, capital of the Mongolian Province of Suiyuan. Japanese troops were said to be pursuing Chinese westward along the Peiping-Suiyan Railway. Another column was driving across sandy wastes toward Taolin, northwest of the Suiyuan capital.

tonight, said to be near a nervous breakdown.

After further consideration of the case, Toalson said he was "more anxious than ever" that Kilpatrick be kept in police custody.

"There were no powder burns on Waters' head," Toalson said. "The bullett passed through one brain and lodged in a wall of the room."

Witness Faints.

Stanley Johnson, of Red Cloud, Nebr., a fraternity member, told Prosecutor Edwin C. Orr that Kilpatrick, believing Waters' suicide threats were a bluff, handed him a pistol. Kilpatrick was then said to have turned his back.

Kilpatrick fainted after the shooting, was revived and fainted again. W. H. Sapp, Kilpatrick's attorney, said "everything points to suicide."

Some fraternity members said Waters' hands were folded on his chest when they entered the room after hearing the shot. Others said they were certain one arm dangled from the bed on which the body lay.

League to Shift China War Burden

Geneva, Sept. 26 (U.P.).—The League of Nations will leave the task of trying to formulate a plan to end the Chinese-Japanese war to powers directly interested in Far Eastern affairs, it was understood tonight.

When the 23-power advisory committee on Far Eastern disputes reconvenes tomorrow a sub-committee of Pacific powers will be appointed to recommend steps designed to end the conflict.

The sub-committee probably will include Great Britain, France, Russia, Australia and the United States if Washington's consent can be obtained.

Dingledine, Suspect In Slaying, Captured

The British Embassy's second secretary Armine Dew, greeted the couple at their nine-room suite in a Rue de Rivoli Hotel.

Lt. Governor Asks Black Ouster Move

Boston, Sept. 26 (AP).—Lieut. Gov. Francis E. Kelly said tonight he would ask Gov. Charles F. Hurley to submit a resolution to the executive council calling for President Roosevelt to ask for the resignation of Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black.

Kelly said he had drawn up the resolution because of charges that Justice Black was a life member of the Ku Klux Klan.

The resolution would call for impeachment of Black by Congress if he failed to resign.

idly and heart complications set in.

Emmet had planned to leave for the United States this week to attend the wedding of his son, Grenville Emmet, jr., in Virginia. Mrs. Emmet and two daughters, Pauline Anne and Elizabeth Virginia, had left Vienna earlier for Paris. They were summoned. The two daughters were expected in Vienna tomorrow.

The new minister was appointed to succeed George S. Messersmith, who became an Assistant Secretary of State.

Emmet was a senior partner in the law firm of Emmet, Marvin & Martin, New York City. President Roosevelt was a junior partner in the firm after his defeat for the Vice Presidency in 1920. At that time the firm name was Emmet, Marvin & Roosevelt. Mr. Roosevelt retired from the firm in 1923.

In 1933, Mr. Emmet was named minister to the Netherlands.

Born in New Rochelle, N. Y., in 1877, Mr. Emmet was educated at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., and at Harvard. After a short period in a brokerage house, he entered New York Law School. He was admitted to the bar in 1901.

Paris Police Seek Body Of Czar's Missing Aide

Paris, Sept. 26 (U.P.).—Police agents attempting to solve the mysterious disappearance of Gen. Eugene Miller, leader of Czarist Russian War Veterans, turned today to a search for his body.

Convinced that the 70-year-old White Russian general was murdered, the Surete Nationale ordered a search of the suburban home of Gen. Nicholas Skobline. Skobline, acquitted by a jury of honor 2½ years ago on charges of being a bolshevist spy, was Miller's aide in the war veterans' organization. When the veterans sought to question him about Miller's disappearance he fled and has not been heard of.

Peace-Time Medals

The office of Senator Josh Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma, yesterday expressed hope for the passage in the next Congress of the Sparkman-Lee bill which would grant medals to Government workers who have made outstanding contributions. It is a very pretty hope. The bosoms of military men heave with the bronze remainders of their valor in war. The sometimes frayed coat of the scientist who has wrought wonders—often at terrific sacrifice—is very generally left unmarked, except by the dust from his labors.

The Sparkman-Lee measure would do something about it. Under its terms, the National Academy of Science would recommend for approval by the President the names of civilian Federal workers who have "made outstanding contributions to the advancement of scientific knowledge or the application of its truths in a practical way for the welfare of the human race, or who . . . have rendered conspicuous service to humanity at the voluntary risk of life or health over and above the ordinary risks of duty."

The Senator's office recalled that the bill was referred to the Library Committee and said that Senator Lee's inspiration for the measure came from a group of civil service employes in Oklahoma.

There would be candidates galore for such recognition, though none of them—they being true scientists—would pose as candidates. There are dozens of them in the Department of Agriculture. And there were those engaged in investigation of Rocky Mountain spotted fever. Five men of the United States Public Health Service lost their lives in that engagement for science.

The courageous work of State Department men and women in Spain and China have touched the front pages. And the Bureau of Standards could offer many. These are just a few examples, occurring off-hand. Maybe you have some definite names in mind. If so, let this column hear of them.

If enacted, there would be 25 awards the first year; after that, not more than 10 medals could be awarded in any one year.

2d Lieuts. Wanted

The War Department will hold an examination December 13-17 for those wishing appointment as second lieutenant in the Medical Administrative Corps, Regular Army. Ten vacancies exist. Here are some of the facts: The appointments will come from pharmacists, male citizens between the ages of 21 and 32 years. They must be graduates of recognized schools or colleges of pharmacy, requiring four years of instruction for graduation and legally authorized to confer the degree of bachelor of science in pharmacy. Examination for appointment includes physical, a written examination in practice of pharmacy, pharmaceutical chemistry, pharmacognosy, pharmacology, bacteriology, hygiene and sanitation, and an estimate of the candidate's adaptability for military service. There will be examining boards at convenient locations.

Culture

The scholastic ambitions of members of the U. F. W. A. are being inquired into. Two thousand of them are having an opportunity to state their educational desires through a questionnaire, and the early returns disclose a vast range of taste, announces Prof. Ralph Turner, of the Social Security Board, who is chairman of the District Organizing Committee's educational group. The greatest interest has been shown in cultural courses, creative writing, group singing, dancing, dramatics, radio script writing and photography. Milder interest is displayed in the labor movement and various technological fields. Prof. Turner (former instructor in history, University of Pittsburgh) and his committee hopes to build the U. F. W. A.'s education policy and program on the basis of information from the poll. On the committee are Gertrude Evans, Veterans' Bureau; Arnold Steinbach, Social Security Board, and Virginia Dean, Farm Security Administration.

'Mr. Interior' (?)

You may have noticed all the publicity the I. D. R. A.'s bathing beauty contest received. This wasn't just accidental, but rather due to that bouncing press agent who has requested and so far managed to keep his own name out of print. He writes in to tell how he did it, or the tribulations he suffered and the soreness of heart he felt at times. Would-be press agents should hear him:

"Very few know the preliminary difficulties encountered in putting across a message or an idea, even though the movement has great merit and power for good. So now, that the tumult and shouting is over, concerning the great amount of publicity we received, the secret can be told.

"J. J. Hengstler, National Capital Park Service, swimming enthusiast, had pursuaded the association to stage a beauty contest. But the difficulty lay in getting demure Federal employes to come forward in the program. Nothing like it had ever been staged in Federal circles. Consequently, the girls held back. It was only by co-operative efforts that young ladies could be persuaded to keep the affair from being a distinct flop.

"But by personal appeals and many announcements—that preliminary pictures were to be taken in street clothes as well as bathing suits—that girls were prevailed upon to assist. Finally enough girls were gathered together with their bathing suits a week before the contest. The newspapers were notified. Pictures in all Washington papers the next day revealed a lovely group of Federal employes in bathing suits, who were in contest for the title of 'Miss Interior.' But the pictures did not tell the story that lay behind it all, nor the difficult task the publicity committee had in staging the affair."

It would seem that after passing through such trials, the publicity agent should at least have the designation of "Mr. Interior."

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	3 ♡	3 ♠
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

West, void of his partner's suit, opened a low club, and declarer had no trouble in fulfilling the contract: in fact, he made five odd, losing only two spade tricks.

While the 650-point score thus earned was gratifying, it showed a substantial loss on what might have been earned. South was guilty of a very foolish action when he rebid his hand over East's three spades. South probably reasoned that his hand was well above minimum strength but this actually had little bearing under the circumstances. North had already given a double raise in hearts which was forcing to game, but—and here is a point far too often overlooked—the force to game involved in North's bid was equally forcing on North himself. In other words, since North had announced that game must be reached, it was inconceivable that he would violate that understanding. Thus, had South passed to three spades, the pass would have been 100 per cent forcing.

Obviously, when North heard the three spade bid he began mentally to lick his chops, in anticipation of a highly profitable double. He must have been disconcerted, to put it mildly, when his own partner rescued the enemy from what North could tell would be a horrible fate. Of course, it would be a horrible fate. Of course, it would have taken only reasonably good defense to hold East to five spade tricks at his contract for nine tricks, and the 1,100 points penalty would have been the greatest compensation possible for North and South on this one hand.

Had South seen distinct slam possibilities for himself, he would have been justified in overcalling East's bid. His hand did not contain slam material, however, and therefore the one correct action was a forcing pass.

A Wise Decision.

It is reported on reliable authority that the tentative arrangements for a special session of Congress have been abandoned within the past few days. There never has been a single good reason advanced for calling Congress in special session, and there are numerous and excellent arguments against so doing.

No doubt the President would have welcomed an opportunity to show that he could still bend Congress to his will by securing speedy action on Administration measures, such as the wages-and-hours bill and the farm program. But, apart from its problematical value in restoring the somewhat impaired Presidential prestige, a special session would have served no useful purpose.

It was distinctly not in the public interest to try to hasten action on measures requiring study and deliberation. Indeed, it would have been most unwise to have called Congress in session to debate controversial issues before its members had recovered from the effects of the last exhausting session.

Although the President may have been moved by these considerations, it is more probable that he does not care to risk an airing of the controversy over Senator Black's appointment. Moreover, he probably would prefer to avoid Congressional meddling in international affairs at the present critical juncture. However, the reason advanced for his change of plan is that the farm bill has yet to be drafted. This is rather in the nature of a convenient excuse, since the President has heretofore assumed that work on the bill would be speeded up in time for presentation at the projected special session.

Whatever the motives that influenced him, the President has made a wise decision. The unfinished business can be disposed of not only as well but better in the regular session in the absence of an emergency calling for immediate action.

In The Regatta's Wake.

The President's Cup Regatta is over. And on its heels, whether or not by pure coincidence, comes the announcement that War Department engineers have finally approved plans for improvement of the water front. This seems a singularly propitious time for the good news. Water-sport enthusiasts, and the community in general, are becoming more and more Potomac-conscious. Certainly the recent aquatic activities played no small part in publicizing the potentialities of this river as a recreation center.

The Potomac was once an important artery of commerce. No one today anticipates that Washington will ever become a major port. At the same time, the river is already sufficiently utilized, both for business and pleasure, to justify all of the harbor development plans which will shortly evolve from the blueprint stage. Their desirability in making Washington the pleasure-boating center for which nature seems to have intended it is obvious.

Much water and a great deal of talk has gone under Washington's bridges since the first steps toward improving the water front were taken. Those now in prospect will only round out a well-integrated plan. That this is desired by the people of the District is attested by the unusual amount of interest shown in this year's regatta, the sponsors of which were fully conscious of the long-range value of their efforts.

The Time To Investigate.

The reported rise of vigilante organizations in various parts of the United States is a development which no American jealous of our hard-won liberties and interested in the preservation of democratic institutions can view with any measure of equanimity.

In frontier days the absence of any effective law-enforcement agencies may have justified the creation of vigilante bodies. There is no such justification for them now. However well-meaning their announced purposes, they constitute a covert threat to civil liberties and tend by their activities to break down that law and order they are presumably intended to serve.

It is entirely in order, therefore, for the Department of Justice, working in collaboration with the National Labor Relations Board and the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee, to undertake an investigation of the spread of vigilantism. Such an investigation is particularly in order in view of the unsavory findings of Senator La Follette and his colleagues in the field of industrial espionage.

Groups with the objective of taking law enforcement into their own hands can flourish only when their activities are shrouded in secrecy. Therefore, the time to check any movement of this sort is before it gets fully under way. In most cases the mere knowledge that the Government is alert to the danger will be enough to dissipate it.

Trade Under The Trade Pacts.

During the past two years both the import and export trade of the United States has rapidly expanded. The rise has been much more pronounced, however, in the case of imports. As a result we have, for the first seven months of the present year, an unfavorable merchandise balance of $145,000,000.

Attempts are frequently made to link these changing trade trends with the reductions in our tariff duties under the reciprocal trade agreements. But an analysis of the official data by Dr. Henry Chalmers, of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce effectually discredits such efforts.

During the first half of the present year it appears that the increase in imports from countries with which we have no agreements has been both absolutely and relatively much greater than the increase reported for trade-agreement countries. Compared with the first half of 1935, when only one reciprocal treaty was in operation, imports for the corresponding period this year rose by 77 per cent in the case of countries outside the network of trade agreements, whereas imports from trade pact countries increased by only 59 per cent.

Then, further to confound critics of the trade pacts who assert that the United States has made bad bargains in executing these agreements, it happens that our exports to trade-agreement countries have risen more rapidly than our shipments to other countries. The increase amounts to 58 per cent in the former case and 46 per cent in the latter.

While the conclusion of trade agreements has undoubtedly been responsible for some of the foreign trade gains recorded during the past two years, that is evidently only one of the various influences at work to bring about expansion. The rise in the value of our import trade in particular is the result of a combination of causes which, as Dr. Chalmers points out, have overshadowed the influence of the trade agreements as a trade stimulant.

In the first place, allowance should be made for the fact that raw materials and semimanufactured products, which constitute the bulk of our import trade, have lately advanced in price more rapidly than manufactured products, which bulk large in our export trade. This results in exaggerating the increase in all trade, especially our import trade.

However, there is no question that the United States has been buying heavily during the present year in countries with which we have no trade agreements. Expansion of business activity has brought with it larger demands for industrial raw materials, such as rubber, tin and wool, while drought and crop restrictions have forced some buying of farm products to make up for deficiencies. Since commodities of this sort are chiefly obtainable from countries with which we have no trade agreements, it follows that the stimulative effect of the pacts has been overshadowed, as Dr. Chalmers explains, by other factors.

It is worth noting also that increases in the value of our exports to trade-agreement countries have been running closely parallel to increases in our imports from those countries. While it would be rash to attach too much significance to this development, it at least disproves the contention that the agreements have been an important factor in bringing about the shift from a favorable to an unfavorable merchandise balance. Moreover, this even balance between increases in amounts imported and amounts exported makes it appear highly probable that the trade agreements have been based on mutual concessions from which we have gained as much as we have given.

The Roll Call.

To many citizens the fact that the American Red Cross is conducting its "coming of age" roll call, beginning today, will come as a surprise. For this useful agency long ago attained maturity. The fact that it is conducting only its twenty-first roll call sharply emphasizes the achievements it has been able to crowd into a relatively brief period of action.

The Red Cross is usually regarded as an emergency agency. Its record in giving relief to the victims of disaster is known the world over. The manner in which the Red Cross responded to this year's floods is sufficient indication of the efficiency with which it operates. And the public response to its appeal provides ample proof of the widespread confidence it has won.

But disasters are not the whole concern of the American Red Cross. Less dramatic, perhaps, but no less effective are its efforts to minimize danger in the home and on the highway, its water safety instructions, its work for the blind and its assistance to expectant mothers.

In responding to the annual roll call, Washingtonians may well note that this fund must support the year-round activities of the Red Cros. Even more significant is the fact that 50 cents of each $1 membership will remain in the local chapter's budget for safety work and various forms of aid that are of immediate value to residents of this community.

A Man Of Broad Vision.

About Edward A. Filene, dead at the age of 77, it can be said without the slightest suggestion of paradox that his passion for public service was the natural and, indeed, the inevitable outgrowth of a successful career as a business man.

There were many among his contemporaries who, after accumulating large fortunes, retired from business to devote themselves to philanthropy, education and other pursuits far removed from money-making. But in few instances has there been less of a break between business life and public service than in the case of Filene. The same crusading spirit he had manifested in his own business he carried into that larger field of social activity to which, during the closing decades of his life, he devoted his time, his fortune and his energies.

Business did not narrow him as it has narrowed many of his fellows. His vision grew wider with the years and so did his receptivity to new ideas. Indeed, it can be said of him that the older he grew the younger he became.

By no means all of the numerous ideas and projects he sponsored were of equal merit or moment. It would have been extraordinary if they had been. But all of them, in one way or another, were shot through with a profound sense of social needs and an abiding faith in man's capacity to progress.

Long before it became fashionable to do so, Filene hammered away at the idea that economic salvation was to be had through mass purchasing power created through the lowering of prices by means of mass production. He never subscribed to the comfortable but socially dangerous belief that the abuses of the industrial system were the inevitable concomitants of its virtues. Filene steadfastly maintained that these abuses can be eradicated by the men who run the economic machine. Nor did he stop with mere preachments. His inexhaustible energies were constantly employed in organizing bodies such as the International Management Institute at Geneva and the Twentieth Century Fund, which sought to carry out his advanced views.

Filene once described himself as "an unsuccessful millionaire." In so far as his ideas were only partially carried out he was no doubt correct. But in the larger and better sense of the word his life was far from being unsuccessful. For that social consciousness which he sought to instill into business has more and more become a reality. Where once his was a voice crying in the wilderness, the end of his life saw his philosophy of business responsibility receiving ever wider acceptance.

Co-operating Against Crime.

For an organization only two years old the Interstate Commission on Crime has made remarkable progress in co-ordinating the activities of law-enforcement agencies. The parole supervision compact signed at the commission's annual session in Kansas City last week is only one of several projects that organization is sponsoring. Under its guidance widespread co-operation among the States in their fight against crime is at last becoming a reality.

Thirty State Legislatures have voted to participate in the compact for supervision of parolees and probationers. It will permit the movement of parolees from one State to another to join their families or obtain work, without loss of supervision so essential to their rehabilitation. In addition to consummating the agreement at Kansas City, representatives of the signatory States also adopted rules to govern its operation, leaving ample latitude for each State to make supplementary regulations as needed.

Within the course of a few months, according to Judge Richard Hartshorne, chairman of the commission, that agency has succeeded in "lining up more than half the entire Nation in co-operative action to control crime." The bill sponsored by the commission, permitting pursuit of criminals across State lines, has been adopted by 22 States. Nineteen States have simplified their extradition procedure and 21 have enacted the commission's uniform bill providing for the transfer of witnesses across State lines.

Each of these measures carries its own indorsement. Together they represent an enlightened effort to prevent criminals from thwarting the law by racing from State to State and hiding behind technicalities. Of course, the agreements thus far consummated are only a beginning. Already the Interstate Crime Commission has turned its attention to the control of firearms, crime prevention, etc. The chief significance of these compacts is that they point the way toward more effective law enforcement without abandonment of local control.

Compacts of this sort were made possible by the Sumners-Ashurst act permitting the States to enter into mutually helpful agreements for the control of crime. They are in no way inconsistent with the extension of Federal authority in fields where unified enforcement has become essential. But they should be of great assistance to the States in exercising that very large measure of responsibility for public order which still rests upon them.

Appreciation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: At the forty-first annual session of the State Council, District of Columbia, Daughters of America, held at the Mayflower Hotel 17th instant, the following was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That a vote of thanks and appreciation be extended to The Washington Post for courteous treatment of our order.

The Post covered the session better than any other paper. I wish especially to commend the interest and splendid reports of your club editor, Miss Arndt. We appreciate her co-operation.

Puzzled By Communists.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Well, it seems that the Communists are doing it, too. I mean, joining with the patriotic citizens at large in celebrating the 150th anniversary of the signing of our Constitution. And with it the Reds are unhesitatingly coupling a little anniversary celebration of their own—"the eighteenth anniversary of the founding of the Communist Party." Try that on your pianol

I was handed one of the leaflets on the street the other day, and some of their statements left me breathless. Amongst other virtues, as I recall, they're laying claim to represent "Twentieth Century Americanism." Is this deliberate confusionism, or is it? On what possible grounds can they make such claims? I've always thought of myself as being pretty sophisticated, politically; but I'm afraid I've gotten sadly out of touch.

Publicity For Relief.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Press reports state that Florida's new WPA administrator told newspapermen there would be no more secrecy concerning the operations of the relief organization. This is refreshing information and it is hoped will be passed down the line to all the administrator's subordinates who consider themselves demi-gods, or big shots, enveloped in an aura of self-importance, whose hardest work is signing on the dotted line and inculcating fear in the laboring man, who is expected to offer continuous adulation in order to hold his place on the relief pay roll.

Those who continue to do their own thinking know that all shots, big and little, from swivel-chair warmers to the man digging ditches, are on the charity of the taxpayers of the country, many of whom, if they had what the Spaniards call verguenza, would sign off the relief roll and seek private employment or live on the accumulated interest of their investments. But why was there ever any secrecy in connection with relief activities? Was it to shield the grafters, the chiselers and other parasites on the pay rolls? I wonder.

The Cup Regatta.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Through the years since 1926 some of us have noted with a good deal of satisfaction the rapid growth of the President's Cup Regatta, held on the hisotric Potomac at the National Capital annually since and beginning with 1926. As a member of the Corinthian Yacht Club for a period of years surrounding 1926, when the idea of holding such an event here at Washington was conceived by a progressive group of members of that club, and as a member of the club's President's Cup Regatta committee and as chairman of the publicity committee for the first President's Cup Regatta, I had the opportunity to acquire some notion of the magnitude of the job which subsequent President's Cup Regatta committees and the President's Cup Regatta Association have accomplished in the development of the regatta on the Potomac into the great event it has become in these later years.

The 1926 President's Cup Regatta, the first one bearing the President's name and having the President's sponsorship for the principal trophy—the large and artistic gold President's Cup—was an event of considerable scale. Washington had not before seen anything in the shape of a regatta to compare with it. The Washington press estimated that about 150,000 people lined the shores of the Potomac and crowded hundreds of official and spectator water craft to witness the regatta on the two days that first regatta was held.

Probably no form of recreation is more healthful, more wholesome or more enjoyable than that afforded by sailing and anchoring on the water in a boat. Ten years ago boating—yachting, some call it who have the larger and more costly craft—on the Potomac in the environs of Washington was participated in by only a comparatively few people; only a few hundred people knew what it was. Today, thanks to the great stimulus of the President's Cup Regatta over the years, the Potomac swarms with boats of all kinds and sizes, power and sail, and thousands of people have receration, pleasure and even health which they might not otherwise enjoy.

And in all this the newspapers of Washington have played a very great part, for without their interest and support, from 1926 on, the great growth of boating which has taken place in and around Washington would not have been possible, and I am sure that all those who have been giving of their time and effort to make the President's Cup Regatta one of the greatest recreational and sporting events in the world more than gladly give a more than full measure of credit to the Washington newspapers for their aid.

President And Court.

To the Editor of The Post.—Sir: If you were told that a certain piece of property was yours, and after having it a while you thought that with a few changes the property would be perfect, even ideal, would you start right out to make those changes alone? Or would you consult someone who had studied that piece of property and saw how it was handled and accepted for 150 years, as to whether your change would be a good one or not?

The point I wish to make is this: The President, in his Constitution Day address, said that the Constitution does not need a lawyer to interpret it for the layman because the document is not a lawyer's contract, but a layman's agreement. The President can not deny that most contracts are made by laymen, not by lawyers. Yet whenever there is some misunderstanding between the parties who made the contract, the laymen will inevitably call in a lawyer, who did not make the contract, to settle the dispute! How can the President disprove this premise in the matter of the laymen's contract called the Constitution?

It seems to me that a lawyer who has studied constitutional law might know a little more about the Constitution than most of the people who are affected by the persuasive speech of the President rather than by the truth, or lack of truth, in it. How many of the President's admirers know that "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States" is a part of the Constitution and not part of some political speech which may be disregarded as such?

I am not surprised, therefore, that many people have not questioned the President's procedure in trying to change our Constitution. We don't need Supreme Court judges to make these changes, if we need them. The President ought to let the court alone. The Constitution specifies "the Congress, when two-thirds of both houses deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, etc." Note, the Congress, not the Supreme Court, shall make any changes. The President has been wrongfully demanding that the court make the changes and the court has rightfully refused to perform the duty of the Legislature!

If the President wants changes in our laws immediately, it is his duty to refer them to the proper body with dispatch. It is evident he has failed to perform his duty correctly because for some time he has been presenting his views to the wrong body. The tardiness in having the legislation which he thinks this country needs is not the fault of the judiciary department of our Government. Such function rests solely on the Executive and the Legislature; they are to blame.

LAW STUDENT.
Washington, Sept. 22.

To the Editor of The Post.—Sir: President Roosevelt, in his Constitution Day address, intimates that he never will be confined in his executive capacity to the straight and narrow path of the Constitution.

Mr. Roosevelt apparently would protect religious freedom, which is specifically mentioned in the Constitution, but would destroy economic freedom, which undoubtedly is implied in the Constitution. The Inquisition of the fifteenth century was sustained by religious tyranny, the more extensive inquisition of the twentieth century is sustained by economic tyranny.

MARY ALLEN GRANT.
Sparta, Ill., Sept. 18.

To the Editor of The Post.—Sir: President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Senator William E. Borah, perhaps the most outstanding apostles of democracy in the world, spoke over the radio last week on the 150th anniversary of the founding of the Constitution of the United States. Theirs were the most striking and significant utterances which this celebration has evoked. In all of the essential aims and objectives of democracy these champions agree, and yet, in the public mind, they stand out conspicuously as leaders of opposing schools of thought on the issue involved in the Supreme Court controversy.

They agree that democracy, both in the United States and in the world, is now approaching a crisis which can be averted only by liberalizing political thinking, and reshaping governmental instruments and agencies to meet the changing demands of the time. They agree that the Supreme Court must be liberalized, but differ on the method of accomplishing this common objective. President Roosevelt believes that the present demands require immediate action, without waiting upon the slow tedium of constitutional amendment. On the other hand, Senator Borah contends that no pressing demand, however urgent, would justify violation of the method of procedure laid down in the fundamental law of the land. The difference, therefore, is not one of principle, but of procedure.

The ultra-conservatives and reactionaries, of both parties, who believe that the Constitution, adopted 150 years ago is adequate to meet the demands of all time, lacking in the courage and daring to present their own views, prudently and cunningly feign to be followers of Borah in order to defeat the policies of Roosevelt. Their laissez-faire philosophy is as far from that of the Idaho Senator as from that of the New Deal President.

The Post Impressionist

Old Wagner.

MY friend, the romance philologist at Catholic University, doesn't like Richard Wagner. In fact, his disrespect for the master of the great music dramas is most shocking at times, and to the worshipful his Bayreuth blasphemies are blood-curdling, indeed.

The first time the matter came up, and I sensed his attitude, I thought it would be an easy job to win him over. Some choice phonograph records were at hand, and I selected something powerful, moving and convincing—I think it was from "Meistersinger." (I had judiciously avoided "The Ring.")

And when we were getting nicely under way, he commented:

"It's long. It's tedious. It bores me."

Now it takes enthusiasm—and frequently devotion—to get around Wagnerian length, and what my friend looked upon as tediousness. And so with the unfavorable reaction, the whole matter dropped, and we didn't try any devices for conversion for a while.

We shied away from the life works of Wagner in our conversation, and for musical entertainment we stayed close to the lighter things.

But we fell down—as usual—in the moment of least expectancy. Certainly I didn't look for any trouble the evening set aside to a consideration of the works of Gilbert and Sullivan. My friend, in professional pursuit of the elusive right word, cherishes most the poetical treats of medieval authors. But in relaxed moments he likes W. S. Gilbert, and, harpooning his rhymes, will gleefully dangle them in mid-air until he needs must free his hook for the next catch.

I never knew, however, that this fondness for Savoyardisms embraced an appreciation of the musical settings of Sir Arthur Sullivan. But that, too, came out on this fateful evening.

We were well launched into "The Mikado." We were amused by the opening chorus of the gentlemen of Japan, and spoke in admiration of Nanki-poo's first number, and reveled in the delights of Ko Ko's tale: "Taken from a county jail, by a set of curious chances, etc."

Expressions of enjoyment were to be heard all around, and I was gratified over the way things were going, until my friend's enthusiasm went unexpectedly out of bounds. As the first act proceeds, you remember, Mr. Gilbert's progressively brilliant verse gets progressively ardent support from Mr. Sullivan's music. Suddenly in the midst of a great whipping of chords in the finale, my friend jumped out of his seat to make this exclamation:

"Boy—I guess that puts old Wagner in his place."

And he deliberately pronounced "Wagner" as if the name applied to the author of labor-relations acts, not of immortal music.

My friend's field of scholarly study is, broadly, the story of the Arthurian legends. He is particularly concerned about the beginnings of the Parsifal tale. Then he gets off on side trips once in a while—most recently this summer—on the history of the Tristan yarn. He was telling me about some of this history just the other day.

So I didn't think it at all obvious, or out of the way, to observe (and I did it very casually):

"You know, Bill, 'Tristan' proved to be one of the hits of Broadway when it was presented at the Metropolitan last winter. House sold out weeks in advance of performance."

"It was Wagner's 'Tristan'?" queried Bill.

I said, "Yes." And I affected some kind of air to show I had made my cutting remark, and didn't intend to dig deeper.

"Well," said Bill, "I'm not surprised. 'Tristan' is a darn good story that's been packing 'em in, and wowing 'em for right close to a thousand years now. Why, it's something we are going to bring out in our course on 'The Old Epic.'

"And here's something—the story as it was presented, say in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, didn't have all the festoonings and orchestral trappings that you see in Wagner's piece. It was up to 'le jongleur' to do the job all alone. All he had was his voice to recite the poems, and a lute to strum for accompaniment.

"It was a rough story he told—probably not a very literary one—of Tristan, Isolde, and old King Mark. But he held his audiences spellbound. Hundreds of them.

"And Wagner is supposed to be impressive, because his dramas, as in the case of 'The Ring,' run into a series of performances that must be given on successive nights. Well, the old troubadour of olden times could match that. Why, he had a script that ran into thousands of lines—as the story grew from year to year its verse expanded, in some versions to 6,000 or 7,000 lines. The jongleurs frequently broke this up into sections, one of which would fill an evening for the lords and ladies of the court.

"Think of it, the joungleur did Tristan all by himself, and made a great day of it for his listeners.

"Now, look at what old Wagner came along and did—all the fussing and the fixing—as if a good story can't tell itself . . ."

Then my friend leaned back, and drew on his pipe—and in the aura of smoke that wafted ceilingward he fixed his contemplative eye—on a vision, I was sure, of old Wagner flaunting a particularly vicious set of horns.

Young Mussolini.

WHAT A REMARKABLE young man this is, to be sure, this 21-year-old son of Benito Mussolini, who, without previous experience in the moving picture business becomes one of the leading Italian producers.

Vittorio Mussolini has come to this country to study American methods for a few days, and on his return to Italy will produce movies in co-operation with Mr. Hal Roach. His success is assured before he begins, because failure is not a habit of the Mussolinis. His father's own newspaper is proof of that.

It is a matter of pride, not to say prudence, in Italy to subscribe to the Duce's newspaper and advertise in the same.

The circulation manager has an easy time and never is reduced to the necessity of promoting amateur prize fights in which little gladiators get their little ears punched off and their little brains scrambled in order to sell papers. He doesn't have to give away dictionaries or sets of Dickens as premiums for subscriptions or run crossword puzzles to make circulation, and the promotion manager has no problems at all.

The reason for this is that the editor usually has a break from 12 to 24 hours on big news developments, which makes it necessary for all the other Italian papers to quote from and thus advertise the Duce's own paper.

• • • •

THIS ADVANTAGE ON the news breaks is due to sheer journalistic genius, of course, although a rival journalist might have private, unspoken suspicion that there was some connection between these scoops and the fact that the proprietor of Mussolini's newspaper is also the principal source of news.

There is a superstition, but really no more than a superstition (the Italians are a superstitious people, you know), that it would be very bad luck for a rival to scoop the Duce's own paper by independent rooting and digging. And, being so very superstitious they also think it brings good luck to give prominent credit to the Duce's journal in lifting news belatedly therefrom.

At times when the war scares are up and shipping by sea and rail is restricted, it occasionally becomes necessary to limit the quota of newsprint for the Italian papers, all but the Duce's own, and this, too, tends to promote the success of Mussolini's property. But, after all, what would you? Would you starve a journal which, by superior performance, has shown itself to be the best in the country, and thus curtail the supply of intelligence and inspiration which the people derive from its pages? Oh, you would, would you? Then you would find yourself exiled to Lipari, and let there be no irresponsible demands for a look at the Duce's income tax returns, either.

It is easy to foresee tremendous success for Vittorio Mussolini in the moving picture business, and the American Mr. Roach is indeed fortunate to have established relations with so gifted an associate. There will be no problems of equipment or stock or talent in the studios of Mussolini and Roach, and who is the theater operator anywhere in the boot who would have the unwisdom to refuse to exhibit one of Vittorio's productions?

• • • •

BUT SUPPOSE THAT such there were? Might it not be discovered that there was a shortage of electric power, and that unfortunately his theater would have to remain dark for a spell? Indeed, might he not be picked up on suspicion of disloyalty to the Duce himself in declining to show the movies made by the Duce's son?

Let it not be thought that the Mussolinis or their particular friends enjoy any special privileges, but neither should it be forgotten that they are very smart people, the Mussolinis and their friends. Americans in Rome soon learn.

Your correspondent, when in Rome, learned that a young lawyer, the son of a close friend of the Duce, had been retained as counsel for an American firm which had a large sum of money impounded there. He was unable to dislodge the money, but under the law it was all right to pay him a large proportion of it as his fee for making the effort. If he then kicked back two-thirds of the fee to his client and the client then shipped it home to America, would that be a racket or would it be a private arrangement and nobody's business?

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Dr. Roosevelt And The Patient.

Dr. Roosevelt—Well, I thought I'd drop around and give you a going over.

Uncle Sam—What? Again!

Dr. Roosevelt—On the level, how are you feeling?

Uncle Sam—The only difference between me now and when you took over my case is that I'm able to sit up in a constant sun-bath.

Dr. Roosevelt—Nonsense! When I found you, you didn't know where you were and neither did I or your friends.

Uncle Sam—And now it's unanimous!

• • • •

Dr. Roosevelt—I don't like to hear you talk like that. You feel good, don't you?

Uncle Sam—Yes, but I can't trust my sensations any more.

Dr. Roosevelt—And you look good.

Uncle Sam—Some of my best friends tell me it's just the lighting effects.

Dr. Roosevelt—Five years ago you were in such desperate shape that you didn't know which way to turn.

Uncle Sam—Yes, and during those five years I've been turning so much I don't know whether it's a dance, a carousel demonstration or chronic dizziness.

Dr. Roosevelt—Look at yourself in the mirror; your muscles are bulging, your eyes are bright and your cheeks are rosy.

Uncle Sam—So were Jim Braddock's.

• • • •

Dr. Roosevelt—You're a different man, I tell you.

Uncle Sam—Yes, but I don't think I am different in the way you mean it. I still can't make up my mind whether in case of a relapse I'd prove half the man I used to be.

Dr. Roosevelt—You lack confidence.

Uncle Sam—You're telling me!

• • • •

Dr. Roosevelt—You're an ingrate, my boy.

Uncle Sam—Not at all, doc. I admit I was a sick turkey when they called you in. I admit you got right down to cases, gave me some darned good medicines, got me on my feet and maybe saved my life.

Dr. Roosevelt—Then what're you squawking about?

Uncle Sam—I'm the only case in history where the doctor thought it was all right to operate after the patient got better.

Dr. Roosevelt—I'm not operating.

Uncle Sam—It's either you or those young internes.

• • • •

Dr. Roosevelt—There's nothing wrong with you. Everything would be okay if you would stop listening to Gen. Johnson, the Liberty League and all those other Tories.

Dr. Roosevelt—I wish you wouldn't remind me.

• • • •

Dr. Roosevelt—You mean Johnson?

Uncle Sam—No, I mean that one I keep getting between the Supreme Court and the bladder. Experimentitis, they call it.

Dr. Roosevelt—You haven't felt anything yet. I have only just begun experimenting. I'll make a new man of you yet.

Cross And Swastika

By Ewart Edward Turner.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

(Editor's note: This is the last of four articles by Dr. Turner on the religious situation in Germany.)

Events in Germany since 1933 have finally convinced large sections of Catholic and Protestant leadership that National Socialism intends to erect itself as the sole religion for all Germans. Nazism is choosing to support its labor leader, Dr. Ley, when he states: "The party claims the totality of the soul of the German people. It can and will not suffer that any other party or point of view dominates in Germany." Hitler will tolerate Christianity only insofar as Christianity submits to Nazi doctrine. This is the key to the understanding of the struggle between church and state in the Third Reich.

Three factors lead Christians in Germany to this conclusion. First, the public statements made by Nazi leaders and the doctrines being taught the youth in party organizations and at school. Second, the attempt to destroy the church administrations that refuse to replace Christian faith with Nazi ideology. Third, an increasing pressure on individuals to demonstrate party loyalty by leaving the church.

I am convinced after first-hand study of conditions in Germany during seven consecutive years that the German people did not want or anticipate the de-Christianization of their native land. Point 24 of the party's platform advocating "positive Christianity" drew the allegiance of millions of devout Catholics and Protestants. The truest patriots in Germany today are those who are willing to pay any price to preserve Christianity as the heritage they bequeath to their children.

Only a minority in Germany is seeking this extermination of Christianity. Many an hour I have spent this summer in National Socialist homes where the gravest concern exists as to the direction which radicals in the party are taking. But these radicals are the very ones who are increasingly being given control over the education of the youth and over the policy toward the church.

New Nazi Religion One Of "Blood And Soil."

AT THE RISK of being classed as another "agitator against Germany" I must obey my conscience and point to facts which I find imperiling the soul of the country which, although I have no German ancestry, I am proud to claim as my second Fatherland.

I take my stand with the Confessional church in Germany. The three points which I have mentioned summarize the concern of these confessional pastors for the spiritual life of Germany.

First, the statements and doctrines advocated by those who represent the party. Hitler's own Minister for Church Affairs, Dr. Kerrl, bluntly asserted on February 13, 1937, "The question of the Divinity of Christ is ridiculous and inessential. A new authority has arisen as to what Christ and Christianity really are—Adolph Hitler." Baldur von Schirach recently declared that National Socialism was Germany's faith and Hitler her Deliverer. Goebbels, Ley, Darre, Rust, Streicher, constantly define Germany's faith in terms of a religion of blood and soil.

Hitler today is supreme in determining what Germans shall come to believe. What are his doctrines? Their racial nature stands out on every page of Mein Kampf. Even more clearly, this substitute religion of race stands out in the writings of Alfred Rosenberg, the man whom Hitler declares to be the thinker he most respects in National Socialism.

The Church accuses National Socialism of indoctrinating German youth with Rosenberg's racial mysticism. Moderate Nazis reply that Rosenberg's views are private, not official. These moderate Nazis have always been embarrassed when asked to explain why Rosenberg has been appointed "Reich Leader for the Education of the Party."

Preacher Of Paganism Honored With Large Award.

THIS YEAR'S Party Congress at Nuremberg brings even a more embarrassing revelation. On September 7 Hitler awarded Alfred Rosenberg the first prize for accomplishment in German art, science and literature. Coming at this time, the award of the 100,000 mark prize to the ace Nazi pagan philosopher serves as eloquent answer by Hitler to the embattled Christians.

Rosenberg's doctrines include rejection of the Creator God; the God of the Old Testament is for him a "demon" and a "tyrant God." The only God he knows is "in the soul and blood of man." He respects Jesus as a hero but denies his Jewish origin, rejects much of the Sermon on the Mount as "Semitic outcroppings," rejects the cross as unheroic, terms the resurrection theory a "hopeless Judaization of our churches." Rosenberg writes that the Christian Church "has poisoned our soul, our European race." These are the ideas of the man to whom Hitler has given honor for distinguished service to Nazi doctrine. Baldur von Schirach, Hitler's Youth Leader, has publicly declared, "Rosenberg's way is also the way of German youth."

A second group of facts which makes it seem that the Nazis want to replace Christianity concerns the destruction of church administrations which refuse to adulterate Christian faith. Of the 28 regional churches in Germany only eight have escaped this assault; the others have had their legal church administrations deposed by Nazi party interference.

Except for the small district of Lower Silesia, the whole Evangelical Church of Prussia, numbering 17,000,000 members, has had its church organization dissolved by state interference. Since the majority of pastors and people oppose this state aggression, the temporary organization known as the "Confessional Church" has been brought into existence to maintain church administratiin.

Anti-Church Pressure Begins In The Schools.

THE TERM, "Confessional church," thus has two meanings: first, it is a general designation for all Christian churches still holding to historic Christian faith; second, it is the name of the administrative organization functioning in the 20 provinces where the legal church governments have been forbidden by the state.

The third factor which convinces Christians in Germany that Nazism seeks to become a substitute religion is the pressure on individuals to demonstrate party loyalty by leaving the church. The idea begins even in the schools. One parent showed me the notebook of his 14-year-old son, where he had written from his teacher's dictation: "When a person is in his teens, he can remain religious and still eliminate Christianity from his life, without having to let his parents know."

So many party members are leaving the church that the state has forbidden pastors reading the usual lists of resignations from church membership; it reveals too obviously a tendency which is officially promoted but not desired to be brought to public attention. In one town where I visited, 50 city officials were instructed to leave the church; 49 did, and the one who did not was removed from office.

A typical letter threatening those who attend church came to my hands in the Black Forest. It is written by Party Leader Spohn and was sent on August 6 to "all officials and party members." Here are extracts: "I consider it my duty to call the attention of all officials, including those retired, to their duties to the state. It must never happen again that officials with their relatives sit in the churches and listen hour after hour to clergymen cut loose against the state. Should an official or his relatives prove guilty in this respect, I will be compelled to take measures against such treacherous persons."

It is sad to think of a devout widow of 70, living on a pension, receiving such a letter as this.

Five Ball Brothers Honored by Muncie

Muncie, Ind., Sept. 26 (AP).—A monument was dedicated to Muncie's five noted Ball brothers, gift of grateful townspeople. The brothers came here 50 years ago from Buffalo, N. Y. The town gave them $20,000 worth of land and they started a glass jar factory. Today they own also a department store and a large furniture store and have interests in banks, newspapers and big industrial corporations. Frank C. Ball is the only living brother.

Bishop to Conduct Vigilante Inquiry

New York, Sept. 26 (AP).—Formation of a national committee to investigate "vigilantism" in strike areas was announced today through the American League Against War and Fascism.

Bishop Francis John McConnell, of the New York Methodist Episcopal Church, will be chairman of a panel which will hold hearings, with witnesses from strike areas, in Pittsburgh on October 8.

France Awake

By Stephen King-Hall.

Renaissance In The Republic.

A RENAISSANCE is taking place in France. This land and race of concealed resources are blossoming into fresh vigor after a period of apparent decadence and decay.

The Germans and the Italians are fond of saying that France is on her last legs and riddled with "bolshevism" and "communism." English visitors, who are inclined to be put off by the fact that a certain degree of primitiveness in plumbing is invariable in provincial France, also sometimes come home feeling that the French are of no account as a force in the world.

To think this is to make a great mistake. Another deceptive feature in France is the army. Except on ceremonial occasions French soldiers are not very impressive to look at. They appear to be slovenly and completely devoid of spit and polish. But when it comes to business they know what they are about. Even in the matter of plumbing and the deplorable condition (as a rule) of what Alphonse Daudet called "Le petit chambre au bout du corridor" this defect is set off on the balance sheet of material civilization by the existence in every part of France of a standard of cooking equal to the best which London can offer.

• • • •

I WROTE just now that there is a kind of national awakening going on in France, and one of its symptoms is the extraordinary degree to which Frenchmen have suddenly begun to travel about within their own frontiers.

This active internal migration is largely the result of the introduction throughout industry of holidays with pay. Every innkeeper with whom I have discussed the matter assures me that he has never known such a coming and going inside France as there has been these last six months. Large numbers of French workmen have suddenly awakened to the existence of their Riviera and descended in shoals on that home of luxury. This has caused some anxiety to the shrewd gentlemen who exploit well-to-do foreigners, for they argue that clients from London and New York do not go to the Riviera to mix with the proletariat who are expected to patronize Coney Island, Blackpool, Margate and Brighton.

Here is a little story which illustrates the changing France. This afternoon I gave a lift to a young man and his wife who were hiking along in the blazing sun on the skyline road of the Vosges. He is an engine driver and his lady helps out the family income by running a single-handed dressmaking shop. She laughingly said that whilst her husband now enjoyed a 40-hour week, the new laws did not apply to one-man business and she worked 12 hours a day and then had trouble in persuading ladies to pay their bills. She asked me whether dressmakers in England had the same difficulty, and I told her that so far as I knew ladies were ladies all the world over.

However, the news which impressed me was that this young couple had already managed to visit Normandy and Nice this summer and hoped to go to England next year. Some week-ends they get into collapsible canoes and float perhaps a hundred miles down the Rhine, then pack their craft into suitcases and come home by train.

• • • •

THE YOUTH of France are rapidly bursting out of the rather rigid bonds in which they have hitherto been brought up. They are going in for hiking and for bicycling tours, though the movement has not yet reached anything like the proportions it has achieved in Great Britain and Central Europe.

Whilst on the subject of hiking, I might mention that just before I left London I heard from a young lady who is one of our members that she and her sister had successfully completed a hitch-hike from Paris to Cannes. They had only been obliged to walk 9 miles and the trip had cost then about ten shillings a head!

Reverting for a moment to the question of the moral solidarity of France, which is a matter of first-class importance for the future of Europe, I feel that one has only to spend a little time in the provinces, mixing with the farmers and the petit bourgeois, in order to sense the unshakable strength of this nation whose roots are in the soil and whose intellectuals, often drawn from the villages through the fine sieve of the desperately severe French educational system, instinctively feel that they are the true guardians of "L'Esprit Europeen."

Insofar as the foreign affairs situation at the present moment is concerned, all Frenchmen with whom I have discussed the matter are convinced that close collaboration with Great Britain is necessary if peace is to be preserved. The small man in France—such as my engine-driver friend, a postal official, a farmer, a lorry driver, a forester, etc.—thinks that Great Britain has been inexplicably weak with Hitler and Mussolini.

They do not of course appreciate Britain's preoccupations with the Far East (where, so far as I can make out from the local paper, the Chinese are putting up a stout resistance), nor do they believe me when I tell them that we allowed our armaments to fall to a dangerously low level. They usually grin politely and skeptically at this point in the discussion whilst rubbing their forefingers and thumb sharply together in order to express their conviction in the existence of the enormous wealth of Les Anglais.

World War Novel

By William Lyon Phelps

'Leno.'

Yes, it is another new novel about the World War; it is full of painful incidents and is a tragic story; so if you really cannot stand another book of the war, and if you do not want to read any narratives describing human suffering, you had better let it alone.

Yet I am glad I read it; it is interesting from first page to last; it is not long; its structure is original, its two leading characters are appealing, and it gives me (who have never been there and have not the slightest intention of ever going thither) a vivid picture of the Balkans, their scenery, their people, and their customs. It is strange that those countries, minor in size, population and individual importance, should have caused so much world-wide tragedy.

• • • •

"Lena" is written by a Frenchman, Roger Vergel; it is translated by Warre Bradley Wells; it is published by Random House, New York.

Mr. Wells is a well-known Irish journalist, man of letters, novelist, and professional translator; he has made the original of this story into excellent and vigorous English.

Although the author is a Frenchman and the hero a French lieutenant, the story deals with horror of the slaughter of innocent women and children among the Bulgarians and others, caused by the French airplanes. The lieutenant had a fine record as an "ace," etc., in the war and then, one day, he happened to read the list of women and children killed by one of his triumphant raids, and he, at his own request, was transferred from aviation to the infantry. There is something glorious and soul-stirring, he seems to say, in a desperate hand-to-hand fight between soldiers. But this passionless scientific slaughter of women and children—the memory of it almost drives him insane.

• • • •

Lena herself is unlike any other woman I have seen in fiction, but I shall not forget her.

Tom McCarthy

THEY'RE ALL going "college" in their own way . . . at Georgetown, American and George Washington Universities . . . but they're all having the time of their lives.

TOM McCARTHY.

Up at Georgetown they're breaking in the neophytes under the unrelenting gaze of the Sophomore Vigilance Committee. Walking like a duck — while cheered or jeered by Sophomores—is but one of the measures by which Georgetown freshmen are initiated into the higher mysteries of a college education.

Out at American U., on the other hand, the atmosphere isn't exactly conducive to romance, despite the prettiness of this year's crop of co-eds. Donald Davido, who hails from Ridgeway, Pa., and intends to share his time between economics and football, informed me with some pride that the ladies thought he looked very handsome in the flowing green tie and the miniature hat, each a part of the freshman's poor lot. Donald admitted, however, that it was something of a strain on the dignity to have to roll peanuts with his nose up and down in front of the Administration Building.

However, at American University they're all in the same boat. The first-year girls hardly had time to muster up a full-throated chuckle at the expense of the boys, before their own dignity was unceremoniously destroyed. Deprived of all make-up and decorated with green hair-ribbons, the young ladies there are gaining the fellowship of misery with their brother classmates.

• • • •

PERSONALLY, I think I like the system at George Washington, where the sophomore class pitches in, throws a dance for the freshmen and even goes to some pains to introduce them around the campus. While at Georgetown and American the strained expression is a dead giveaway to members of the first year class, at G. W. it is a clear indication that the wearer is much more likely to be a member of the sophomore class.

And, while at Georgetown murmurs of revolt among the frosh are in the air, any revolutionary moves at George Washington will probably originate among the second-year men. The Georgetown freshmen are suffering purely from physical torment. The G. W. sophomore trouble is mental anguish.

"But what are we kicking about?" said Sam Murray of Syracuse, Hilltop freshman. "You ask what are we kicking about? Have you ever tried going around in pants made for suspenders only, trying to hold 'em up with a belt?"

At Georgetown, garters, suspenders, rings, watches and walking on the East Side of O street are all taboo. The sophomores feel that no time at all should be lost in teaching the newcomers their own utter inconsequentiality in the general scheme of things.

• • • •

YET, AT G. W. the wearer of the harried look is nine times out of ten a sophomore. There, rushed by the fraternities and welcomed by all, the freshman rises triumphant; while the sophs, enmeshed in their own good intentions, consider leaving town on the next freight and getting away from it all.

Wayne Kniffin, one of the leaders of the Sophomore Club, an outfit almost unique among American colleges in that it actually tries to make life pleasanter for the freshman, has his own peculiar problem. As yet, no one has steped forth and volunteered to share his responsibility.

"Mr. McCarthy," said Kniffin, "you know about such things and maybe you could help us out."

Now Wayne Kniffin stands on the far side of six feet and doesn't look as though there would be many occasions when a second person could be of any possible assistance to him. However, there was an expression of baffled helplessness about him, so I volunteered my services for whatever they might be worth . . . first disclaiming that I knew much about "such things."

"The Sophomore Club wants to help the freshmen," said Kniffin, "but I think it's gone a bit too far. I mean, I think the responsibility is a bit too much.

"Take this morning. I was sitting here in the basement, helping freshmen get their pictures taken for the activity books. There were other sophomores around and there was no reason in the world, as far as I could see, for the lady to single me out from all the rest." Kniffin's athletic six-feet-one slumped despairingly.

• • • •

"IT WOULD BE different, if I'd ever seen the lady before . . . or Mabel, either, for that matter. But, coming as it did out of a clear sky, it's just a bit more than should be asked of any one man.

"I guess I wasn't paying much attention, when the lady and her daughter came through the door. I guess Fairchild here, another member of the club, was handling the activity book desk and I was just taking it easy.

"All of a sudden, I heard a high, feminine voice saying, 'You're the man I want. You're just the type. Now, look at me, young man.'

"Well, I looked up and the lady nearly put my eye out, as she waved a finger in front of my face and said, 'I want you to meet Mabel.'

"Mabel looked almost as miserable as I feel now, but that didn't deter the lady. She said, 'Young man, I like your looks. I feel that you can be trusted. And I need the help of a young man I can trust because Mabel has never been away from home in her life. I am leaving her entirely in your care.'

"With that," said Kniffin, "she turned on her heel and left . . left me Mabel!

"Maybe," said Mr. Kniffin, "maybe I should join the Foreign Legion."

Coal Price Rise To Be Opposed By Commission

By the United Press.

The National Bituminous Coal Commission last night assured millions of householders there will be no general increase in the price of coal this winter if it can prevent it.

The pledge was contained in an announcement the commission will begin public hearings today looking to the fixing of minimum prices under the new Guffey-Vinson act under which the commission was created.

"While it has been impossible to make any conclusive analysis of the price schedules filed by producers' boards during the last three days, there are many indications that no general increase in the retail prices of household coal can be based upon any action the commission may take," the announcement said.

Homes Consume 20 Per Cent.

The commission pointed out that household coal constituted only 20 per cent of the total consumption and has long been on a price basis above the cost of production. This situation, it was explained, results from the fact that the household demand comes in the winter when prices are firm.

On the other hand, railroads, utilities and other large industrial consumers have been buying coal in the summer market, and, according to the commission, in many cases, well below the cost of production. These industries consume 80 per cent of the output.

Seek Stabilization.

Citing as the chief objective of the Guffey-Vinson act the stabilization of prices to the point where the return on the whole production will be at least equal to the cost of production, the Commission's statement said:

"It has been pointed out that if the 80 per cent that has been buying coal at less than cost are brought up to a cost level, it might well be that the 20 per cent who have been buying at or above cost should at the very least suffer no increase."

The commission said on the eve of the price hearings that it has accumulated the most complete statistical study and trade survey ever assembled on any industry. These reports are held as confidential as income tax returns. They have been analyzed, tabulated and correlated by the commission's statistical experts. The files of the commission, it was said, alone contain 15,000,000 items bearing on the elements that go into the making of prices.

Smithsonian Aide Finds No Bones of 'Oldest Americans'

By the Associated Press.

All human remains of America's oldest family have apparently disappeared, a Smithsonian Institution scientist declared today.

Dr. Frank H. H. Roberts, archeologist, who has just returned from a summer of digging at an old camp site in Colorado where these predecessors of the Indian once stopped for a long while, said careful search had failed to unearth any bones or teeth of these "Folsom men."

They were roaming the Western plains and even as far East as the Atlantic Coast more than 20,000 years ago, Dr. Roberts said, because their typical fluted arrow and spear points have been found in widely scattered parts of the country.

G. O. P. Adopts Publicity Ideas Of Democrats

By the Associated Press.

The Republicans seem to have acquired a good political trick from their Democratic opponents.

Back in the Hoover days, they watched the Democratic leadership set up headquarters here and go to work on a between-elections campaign that never faltered or let up for a minute.

They scoffed then, but they learned a lesson when the votes were counted in 1932. And now, they are following the same tactics, with some interesting additions of their own.

Party headquarters, occupying two full floors of a building across Lafayette Square from the White House, throbs with activity, rapid-fire conferences and busy typewriters—and duplicating machines.

John D. M. Hamilton, the alert national chairman, has arranged a series of meetings with party leaders from all sections, and is, himself constantly on the go, visiting States in which he thinks such visits will bring political advantage to the party.

His trips are not speaking tours. Instead he goes quietly from city to city talking with party leaders, assaying the trends and needs of the particular locality from the point of view of the party, and endeavoring to see that those needs are supplied.

The purpose of it all is to see that when campaign time comes along the party is equiped with an organization that is closely knit, emcient and ready for battle, from the field marshals here to the top sergeants in the wards.

Natalie Coe Returns on Brief Visit

As Countess Vitetti She Is Guest at Italian Embassy.

Brother to Entertain at Small Dinner for Her Tonight.

At long last—for her arrival in Washington has been rumored ever since last spring—Countess Leonardo Vitetti is actually here and is the guest for a few days of the Secretary of the Italian Embassy and Countess Roberti.

Young, beautiful, and wealthy, the American wife of Count Vitetti has interesting Washington connections. Her godmother is Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, prominent in social and musical circles of the Capital, and her husband was formerly with the Italian Embassy here. When the former Natalie Coe was married in May, 1934, at the Long Island estate of her father, William Robertson Coe, a large proportion of Washington society went up by special train, and among the guests was the Italian Ambassador, at that time, Augusto Rosso.

Countess' Vitetti's brother, Robert Coe, is in the State Department, and has been in Washington since early summer. Originally slated for a post in Moscow, his orders were changed and he will remain in the Capital for a year at least. He is making his home at the Carlton until he finds a suitable house.

The countess came to this country for the first time in three years in September, to take part in the wedding of the former Lucile Thieriot and Elisha Walker, jr., who were married the 14th of that month. Her husband and small child accompanied her, but the diplomat had to return almost immediately to his post in the foreign office at Rome.

Plain Commendatore Vitetti when she married him, the former Natalie Coe's husband was raised to the rank of count shortly after their wedding. They have taken over an old palazzo in Rome and entertain lavishly and well in the Eternal City. The countess is a close friend of Countess Ciano, daughter of Mussolini and wife of Italy's Foreign Minister.

The articles will be filed in the D. A. R. Library where they will be available for reference. Mr. Proctor will address the Major L'Enfant Chapter, D. A. About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

EVEN THE sedate Chevy Chase Club has finally succumbed to the lure of that hip-twitching dance, the "Big Apple." A large and enthusiastic contingent responded to the call for volunteers there on Saturday evening at the regular dance, and the green lawns around the clubhouse echoed for the first time the weird cries of "truck to the left," "shine," "pose," "Susie-Q to the right," and "praise Allah."

DUDLEY HARMON.

The first time most of the guests looked on skeptically as about 25 hand-picked members went through their paces in the middle of the outdoor dance floor. Most of the audience concluded that they could do just as well themselves—even those who'd never tried it before—so the next "Big Apple" attracted more than 100 dancers and was very confused.

• • • •

AMONG THE most limber of the "truckers" and "shiners" were Nancy Mann, who looked svelte in a black fringe numbah with a bolero jacket; tall and stately Nancy Brereton, daughter of Commander and Mrs. William Brereton; Mrs. Jasper DuBose, "Kepi" Schell, of the Hungarian Legation, who refused to be outdone by a hundred mere Americans; Hank Whitney, who showed amazing versatility; Frances Andrews, daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Adolphus Andrews, and recently returned from a trip to Europe; Bill McComb and Laura Tuckerman, and Cyrus Hill, who recently arrived from Chicago and is staying at the Wardman Park.

Others, who either joined in the goings-on or sat placidly on the sidelines during the evening, were Mr. and Mrs. Henri de Sibour, the Johnny Reyburns, Natalie and Clifton Phillips, who are leaving Washington soon to live in Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Baker; Caroline Chantry, Dick Quay and his bride, in whose honor the orchestra struck up the wedding march, to the great embarrassment of the newlyweds; Mr. and Mrs. Russell Snodgrass, Allen Willcox, who, with Hugh Wise and Sherry Davis, has leased the home of Miss Janet Fish for the winter; Ruth Tuckerman and Sunny Orme, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Hayes, and the latter's sister, Phyllis Hight.

THE SECRETARY of the Italian Embassy and Countess Roberti had in tow Count Rossi, the Italian speedboat racer who came to Washington for the President's Cup Regatta. Others in this group were Mrs. Pearson Rust and Mr. and Mrs. Jasper DuBose. Mrs. DuBose and Countess Roberti, incidentally, were both wearing magnificent and identical silver fox capes.

Dances for the younger set have broken out like a rash on Long Island these autumn days. Hardly a week-end goes by but there are two or three coming-out parties or similar affairs.

Several from Washington went up for the large supper dance which Miss Mallory Mixsell, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Harold Ruckman Mixsell, of New York and Locust Valley, Long Island, gave on Saturday at the Creek Club there for her guest, Miss Minna Mary Royds, a London debutante of the season and daughter of Lady Royds. Our city was represented by Bettina Belmont, Cassandra Parker, Richard Lunn and Rudolph and Geoffrey Kauffman.

And speaking of Long Island—there'll be an Eastern innovation in the polo line there on Wednesday when the first high-goal night polo game in this section of the country will be played on Bostwick Field, Old Westbury, as a benefit for the Boys Club of New York. George F. (Pete) Bostwick, son-in-law of Mrs. James F. Curtis, of Washington, has donated the use of his field and will take part in the match. The other players include Raymond and Winston Guest, Michael Phipps, Stewart Iglehart, James Paul Mills, Capt. C. T. I. Roark and Manuel Andrada.

Odds and ends: John Archbold, son of Mrs. Anne Archbold, has taken a job and a house in Walpole, near Boston, Mass., and so he and Mrs. Archbold will be missing from the Capital this winter. . . . The James Robbs (he is with American Airlines) have flown out to Arizona for a two weeks' vacation at a dude ranch there.

Dr. Lin Yutang To Speak Here

Miss Yoeh E. Wang Heads Committee Arranging for Feature.

Miss Yoeh E. Wang, daughter of the Chinese Ambassador, is hard at work with members of her committee preparing for the lecture Friday evening by Dr. Lin Yutang, for refugees of that country. The Ambassador, Dr. C. T. Wang, will introduce the speaker, who will discuss new aspects of the Sino-Japanese conflict, and his lecture will be preceded by a concert by the Chinese Chung Society.

Author of "My Country and My People," Dr. Lin is said to be the most widely read Chinese author in this country. Besides his books, he frequently contributes to magazines; one of his best known articles which recently appeared concerned his impressions of the United States.

No literary pedant, Dr. Lin has played a prominent part in political, educational and social welfare movements in China during the past few years. He was at one time professor of English philology at the National University at Peiping, and has headed departments in the leading universities of his country. In addition, he is a celebrated humorist.

Pamphlet Debates Consumers' Needs

Whether or not the over-the-counter buyer needs a special Government agency is debated in "Uncle Sam and Mrs. Consumer," a pamphlet published today by the National League of Women Voters.

The league has taken no official stand on this question, still before Congress as part of President Roosevelt's reorganization proposal, which would set up a new Department of Social Welfare and would specify as one of its duties, "to protect the consumer."

Discussing in some detail the 25 Federal agencies already serving the interest of "Mrs. Consumer," the author, Annetta G. Zillmer, the league's secretary of economic and child welfare, dryly comments, "fitting all their activities together into one agency, or even some of them, would be quite a puzzle."

Questions that would have to be settled, Mrs. Zillmer says are: "Could the same agency carry on the research of the Bureau of Home Economics regarding household budgets as well as the meat inspection services of the Bureau of Animal Industry? Could the activities of the Food and Drug Administration in keeping adulterated food off the market be consolidated effectively with those of the National Bureau of Standards in helping to set up specifications for Government purchases?"

In a back-of-the-book resume, all Federal agencies now functioning in Mrs. Consumer's behalf are listed alphabetically, a handy consumers' guide-book in the absence of such a clearing house. From it any housewife can quickly learn what Uncle Sam does to help her as a buyer.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been engaged for some time to a very nice, very capable middle-aged man. I am very much in love with him and I believe he cares equally for me, for he has proved his devotion in many ways during the past few years. However, he has gotten to that playful stage typical of the middle-aged men. He likes to slip off while I am at work and buy cocktails for girls young enough to be his granddaughters. He has a few drinks and flashes an impressive roll of bills, which provokes the girls to "take him for a ride." In other words, they merely put up with him, sponge off him and then laugh at him.

He really doesn't do these things with the intention of hurting me, because he doesn't even know that I know about them. His own friends tell me about them, because they hate to see him making an old fool of himself. Now, there is no doubt in my mind that he will always choose me in preference to young girls, but my patience is just about exhausted.

• • • •

I don't know whether to marry him or not. I don't feel like tolerating, or ignoring, one little flirtation after another for the remainder of my life. And, on the other hand, there is the possibility he might forget these things after marriage. How long does this playful age usually last? What would you advise?

WONDERING.

Man's Indian Summer.

DEAR WONDERING: Once a middle-aged bachelor or widower gets the idea that he is a devil with ladies young enough to be his granddaughters, there is practically no cure for what ails him—unless, of course, he should happen actually to overhear some of their behind-his-back comments about him. With a long-time married man, there is greater chance for recovery. His second spring-time of romancing, if and when it comes, is something like Nature's Indian summer, a feverishly colorful but short-lived season. When it passes, sometimes he finds himself shamefacedly but gratefully back in the same old traces; and other times he emerges from the delirium to find everything changed, and usually not for the better. How he weathers his middle-aged madness depends to a great extent on his wife's adroit or clumsy handling of a delicate and exasperating situation.

• • • • •

There are, undeniably, exceptions to all rules, and it's just possible your beau may be the exception worth worrying with. If he is a widower, his slightly ridiculous gallantries toward extremely young ladies may be nothing more serious than an earnest effort to make hay while the sun shines, so to speak; to have a last giddy fling in the pastures of youth before settling down once more, with a sigh of combined relief and resignation, to the reassuring, dependable companionship of a contemporary-age woman. Maybe he's the sort of man who wouldn't dream of making himself and his wife ridiculous if he were married; who has a nice sense of the fitness of things, and feels that he is observing that fitness in using his current freedom to be a bit of a blade.

• • • • •

I admit you will be running something of a risk in marrying him—unless you have the courage to talk the thing out with him beforehand, which is what I would do in the same set of circumstances. In doing so, however, you will be running another and an equal risk. You may so hurt his pride that his feeling for you will never again be quite the same. However, if his devotion for you is all that it should be, that change of feeling may be all for the better. Thereafter he may stand a little in awe of you, and that's not a bad way for a middle-aged husband to feel toward his wife. On the other hand, he might just possibly come to the conclusion that you were potentially nosier, bossier, slightly more Sunday-school-teacherish than he had counted and might decide that he preferred being an unharnessed old fool to being a hen-pecked husband.

• • • • •

Nevertheless, I still recommend a candid discussion of the cloud on the horizon; handled as tactfully as you possibly can. You might say something like this: "Henry, there's something I feel I should speak to you about. Heaven knows, it's an embarrassing topic to have to bring up, but I'm far too fond of you to sit quietly by and hear you criticized without doing something to put a stop to the gossip. It's about your buying drinks for girls young enough to be your daughters or granddaughters. Now, don't get angry at me. Those are not my words. They're the sort of statements I've had to listen to—with a poker face—for weeks and weeks from persons who've known you longer and better than I. It's not that I mind your buying drinks for whomever you please, or seeing anybody you like, when and as you please. But it makes my blood boil to hear you laughed at, knowing you as I do, to be one of the finest, kindest, sincerest, best-hearted men in the world. It seems the worst feature of the whole thing is that these very girls who sponge off you make fun of you behind your back. There isn't a thing I can do about it," you might say, "except just tell you. My patience with these well-meaning talebearers is just about exhausted; and I thought if I put you wise about to what they are saying you might be able to figure out some way to stop it." Then let the discussion (so far as you are concerned) rest there for the time being.

• • • • •

If the man is at all perceptive, such a presentation of the case—sugar-coated though it may be—should convince him beyond the shadow of a doubt that he has been making several kinds of a fool of himself; and he should quickly revert to more seemly behavior. If, however, he continues to make himself ridiculous, I should say heroic measures are in order. In other words, break the engagement, and tell him to count you out until he learns how to act his age. M. H.

Women Rustle in Satin and Brocades; Resemble Duchesses.

By Ethel Ehlen
The Post Fashion Editor.

WITH LUXURY, OPULENCE and elegance dominating the fall and winter fashion picture, fabrics are returning to the spotlight as an integral part of the costume. Materials rich in texture and color theme are vying with line for first consideration. It is a season when all women may look like queens or duchesses. The splendor of court costumes is being revived in modernized versions and numerous Old World style influences call for fabrics of equal regal appearance.

One of the most lavish collections of silk fabrics in many seasons was shown at the "silhouettes in silk" exhibition, in connection with the recent Fashion and Silk Merchandise Forum, in New York City. Deviating from the traditional fashion shows was a gallery of almost life-size cutouts; portraits of the 1937-38 lady of fashion, combining Paris styles with American silks, in a clever draping of fall and winter fabrics against panels of exposition pink and plaster green.

The dazzling array included pure silk combined with metal (Some were sterling silver and 18 carat gold); two-faced silks with dull side worn out and the satin backing inside; daytime silks with velvety surfaces; evening silks transparent and massive with richness of texture design and depth of color. An appropriate silk was chosen for each of the silhouettes. The Polonaise silkhouette; the revival of the "Naughty Nineties;" 1900 sheath and the vogue for glamour and glitter; the sculptured mode for day and evening; the wasp waist and slightly concave diaphragm; the tubular silhouette; the Directoire; the Empire; the Crinoline, were all portrayed in silk, in a glorious panorama of the current mode.

Today's HEALTH TALK

How to Brush Teeth.

Eighty million people or more in our enlightened land do not brush their teeth—or didn't the last time I counted them, which was the last time I wrote an article on this subject a year or two ago. Maybe as a result of this article they are fewer than they were.

According to my dentist, however, not one in ten of the people who do brush their teeth, do it the right way.

First, the object. The main object of brushing the teeth is not to prevent dental decay, but to prevent pyorrhea. To invigorate infected and receding gums. Dental decay is only partly due to food particles remaining on the teeth: there is a nutritional element that can be influenced by diet, so the toothbrush is only part of the picture. Besides, when dental decay begins it can be easily recognized and treated by the dentist.

Most teeth are lost through pyorrhea. When this is not too far advanced the tooth can be saved. Hence the importance of prevention.

Second, when should proper brushing be taught? As early as possible—at the sixth year, when the first permanent teeth come in. Children in their abundant health and confidence have no conception of the necessity of preserving teeth. Only when they go do we realize how important they are. Children must be guided and instructed in these particulars.

Third, technique. The toothbrush should be small and the surface of the bristles should be level. Especially the tip or toe bristles should be as tall or a little taller than the rest. The toe—or front—bristles are the ones that do the work.

If you want to have an object lesson in what a toothbrush is supposed to do, have your dentist put a stain on your teeth that will cling to the dirty parts, after you have rinsed your mouth with water. You will find that the places you need to brush are at the gum margins along the touching surfaces of the teeth.

Hence a small brush that you can get into the inaccessible parts. Hence a brush with tip bristles as long as the rest, so that by placing these on the teeth at the point of contact and making a wiggling, rotary motion—not too wide a circle—the bristles get in between the teeth and into the gum margins and clean and harden them.

By cleansing in these crevices you prevent tartar formation at the base, or gum line of the tooth, and it is this tartar which is the cause of pyorrhea.

The other important point in technique is to follow a plan so that all the teeth are brushed.

My dentist compares the teeth to a fence, which you are going to paint. And if you are going to paint it with invisible paint, you have to use a plan which will get all the posts. So start at one end, come all the way along in front, stopping at each tooth, then go around and come down the back. Do this on the uppers and the lowers.

Handle the toothbrush so that the bristles enter the crevices at a right angle—go straight in. You couldn't expect them to clean a space between teeth if they went in sideways.

Don't spike the gums. In other words, don't push the bristles on the gum serface. Approach the gums by laying the bristles on the tooth surface and working up to the gum margin.

If you are not doing this—revise your toothbrush technique.

Nut Ice Cream.

Hickory nut ice cream makes a pleasant dessert for fall serving. Add one cup of shelled nuts to each quart of cream or custard mixture. Do not add the nuts, however, until the mixture is half frozen.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain.

IT'S A TOSSUP as to who is more gullible—the man who parts his hair on the "what's left" side, or the woman who is looking for some get-slim-quick method.

Fortunately, the bald-head man is in no very great danger. But the overweight who takes something to convert stored calories into streamlines is risking her health. It is impossible to overstress the danger of these so-called obesity cures. Dr. Helen S. Mitchell and Gladys M. Cook, of the research department of Massachusetts State College, in a recent bulletin, "Facts, Fads and Frauds in Nutrition," warn against the three types of these cures: metabolic stimulants, laxative drugs and food supplements.

The metabolic stimulants, drugs which speed up the metabolism and enable you to burn more calories, are the most dangerous. According to statistics, less than 5 per cent of obese people can blame deficiency.

Stimulants of this kind may cause you to be irritable, trembly and depressed. Aside from these ill-effects, the drug does not discriminate as to the kind of tissue it destroys and may seriously derange the nervous system and undermine the health.

Another powerful base for many of the reducing cures is dinitrophenol. This drug, as these research workers point out, is known to have an insidious and cumulative effect, causing vague and ill-defined symptoms, and resulting, in some cases, in the rapid development of cataracts.

Laxative drugs bring temporary weight loss through the elimination of water from the system. The loss, however, is in water, not in fat, and as soon as the water balance is restored the scales are right back at the old figure. These laxatives have no place as obesity cures, since they hurry along all food, eliminating the protective elements you need. Also, they may result in permanent injury to the intestinal tract.

Likewise, there is no such thing as a reducing food. If you think a food can be reducing, you are in the class with the lady who asked, "When do I take this diet, doctor, before or after meals?" Food does not burn up fat. It may fill a low-calorie niche in the diet, it is true, and in this way it may prove a satisfactory addition to the menu of the reducer. Dr. Mitchell and Miss Cook warn the reducer against such psuedoscientific claims as, "yields quick energy but is never fattening." Any food is as fattening as the energy it yields. There are reducers' foods, but not reducing foods.

Beware of taking anything to reduce except upon the advice of your physician.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Sept. 26.

WELL, IN SPITE of our best efforts, the town isn't quite swept up yet. This haughty and self-conscious hamlet has always considered itself an old master of such mass hullabaloo as New Year's Eve, election night, and lodge clam bakes. But it found that it knew absolutely nothing about wholesale hoopla when the legionnaires took possession last week.

ALICE HUGHES.

The main facts of that historic capture you already know—how the veterans and their ladies took complete charge of midtown Manhattan, running the highways, theaters and taverns as suited their whimsies of the moment. New York, used to jamborees, will never forget that week in September, 1937.

I know I shan't, for a hard-working girl with a roustabout husband and six small tikes to support simply couldn't do any business. I couldn't cover my store beat, I couldn't check the dressmakers and milliners, for the ferocity of the traffic. All that I could do, with the rest of my fellow citizens was teeter on the curb and watch the 24-hour parade go by. Then I tried faithfully to keep a close watch on the activities of the 75,000 legion ladies, but the pace was just too fast. I tried to contact their retiring chief, Mrs. Hahn of Des Moines, but couldn't even reach her hotel.

Finally I gave up, handcuffed and leg-ironed the spouse, locked myself in the Murray Hill tepee and listened to the radio. In the face of a legion convention, at my time of life, I couldn't keep up, and I used to be a fair sort of reporter. Yes, as the song said, ole rocking chair done got me!

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—By a heroic struggle, however, I did manage to chat a bit with Mrs. Robert Walbridge of Peterborough, N. H., my home State, who was one of the two famous McIntyre girls, doughnut dispensers of the Salvation Army, and probably known by sight to more members of the A. E. F. than any of the women who served their country abroad 20 years ago. They were brave and they were faithful, and I found Mrs. Walbridge a calm and yet busy figure in the very middle of last week's ruckus . . . .

• • • •

Our store-keepers made a brave show of fresh fall merchandise for the visiting ladies, and the shops were jammed all the time, both with buyers and "just looking, thanks." But shucks, the show was out on the sidewalk, and that's where we spent most of our time . . .

One of our favorite cooks, Arpad Waltz, who chefs for the Tokay Hungarian Eating-House, has just come home from a holiday in Hungary, and promises me some new cooking tricks he learned this summer while the Duke and Duchess of Windsor were visiting the country. He says the ducal pair had some wonderful eating in Budapest—and Hungarian cooking at its best is difficult to top. . . .

Our little cross-roads college, Columbia University, blew open its academic year last Wednesday. Its 184th year found the school with an enrollment of about 20,000 earnest seekers after knowledge and football fame—but it will grow, I'm sure. . . .

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

The Globe Trotters.

"Did you have a good trip?"

"Perfectly marvelous! I wouldn't have missed the coronation for anything. It was terribly educational."

"That was the way with the North Cape cruise. And I ran onto so many people I knew. Honestly, EVERYBODY went to Norway this summer."

"Well, I never saw so many people I knew in all my life as I did in London. And, my dear, guess WHO I saw! Anthony Eden!"

"You don't mean it; is he as good looking as his pictures?"

"We-ell, not quite. But he's awfully sweet."

"Well, guess who I saw in Holland? This Prince What's-His-Name—you know—the one Juliana married. He's awfully sweet."

"That was the way with Hitler. You know, I had been terribly prejudiced about him, but when you see him—well, he's sort of sweet. I wouldn't have missed Germany for anything."

"Well, I intended to go on down into Russia but everybody said there was nothing to see there."

"Say, just think! I was in 14 countries altogether. It was just like a college education—oh, and guess who I saw in Rumania! King Carol!"

"Oh, did you see——"

"No, I didn't see her. But I DID see that woman who had the crush on Mussolini and shot some ambassador or something. I was simply sick that I didn't get to see Mussolini."

"I got to see the Polish Corridor. It was terribly interesting."

"That was the way with the Paris Exposition. And guess who I got to see in Paris? Schiaparelli! . . . But she just looks like anybody else."

But she just look like anybody else."

"I suppose you got a lot of clothes?"

"Oh, no; this was purely an educational trip. You know, Europe is so terribly interesting just now. As I told Jim, I just thought I owed it to myself to see it. Besides, if there's another war I don't know how long I'd have to wait before I saw it again."

"That's just the way I felt about the North Cape cruise. Those Scandinavian countries are so terribly interesting and everybody was going—though now, of course, I'm just a little sorry I didn't go to China. It would have been so marvelous to have seen Chiang Kai-shek."

"Wouldn't it! Still I guess you can't see everything."

"No, I'm flat broke as it is. But I figure it this way—I've had a liberal education."

"That's the way with me. I'm dead tired and I haven't a stitch of fall clothes, but at least I've got—well, you know a perspective. I've had all those wonderful experiences and memories. Oh, say! I almost forgot to tell you; I was at Cannes! And I took a snapshot of the place where Wally and Edward were married!"

Five Arrested In Junk Case To Face Court

Five men arrested Saturday night in connection with the theft of more than $30,000 worth of scrap metal from the Potomac Power Co. will be arraigned in Police Court this morning.

Two of the men, both Pepco foremen, face two charges of grand larceny each. They are Lawrence Bailey, 54, 468 Maryland avenue southwest, and Allie Downs, 56, 634 Fifteenth street northeast. Police said waste copper and lead scraps had been salvaged and sold to junkyards.

George E. Leonard, 47, 516 A street northeast, named as contact man between the foremen and the junk dealers, is charged with receiving stolen goods. Similar charges were brought against two junk dealers, Louis Fainburg, 53, 524 Quackenbos street northwest, and his son, Raymond Bainburg.

Red Cross Here Launches 21st Roll Call Today

5,100 Workers Canvass for 75,000 Members in 1937.

The American Red Cross, most unselfish organization in the world, today is engaged in its twenty-first Roll Call in Washington, the goal of which is 75,000 members for 1937.

The dues are $1 a year; the return, a little white-and-red button, symbol of mercy in a destructive world.

Today 5,100 volunteer workers will set out to comb Washington for members, invading Government buildings, stores, offices, banks and other institutions. The campaign will continue for 21 days.

Final plans for the Roll Call were made Saturday night at a rally in the sail loft of the Navy Yard, where the workers heard talks by Admiral Cary T. Grayson, Mabel Boardman and Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen.

"Since this is the first big chapter to launch the twenty-first Roll Call, it sets the pace for the country. As Washington enrolls, so the 3,700 chapters enroll."

Cost of Argument Delays Airport

Winchester, Va., Sept. 26.—While the city and State await developments as to who shall bear the expense of erecting a hangar at Winchester's new municipal airport, weeds are growing in the runways, built last fall and this spring by the State highway department. Meanwhile, pilots are continuing to use the old airport, slated for abandonment because of cramped quarters and high rent.

Some months ago, steel arrived for the new hangar, being purchased by the State from a WPA surplus at Langley Field. A representative of the State department of highways declared weeks ago that work was to begin on the hangar in the near future. So far, however, nothing has been done.

Steel Girders Arrive For Huge Rayon Plant

Front Royal, Va., Sept. 26.—The first shipment of steel for the giant rayon plant of the American Viscose Corporation here has arrived on the grounds. It will provide the framework for two large supply buildings.

George M. Reaves, superintendent of construction, said today that the work of clothing this steel skeleton with bricks will begin within two weeks. Carpenter, plumbing and electrical work will go along simultaneously. He said that foundation work for the large factory building, which will cover 22 acres, is more than 50 per cent completed. There now are more that 300 men employed on the Viscose construction operations.

Montgomery County Zoning Ruling Awaited

Enjoining of Officials in Peter Fritz Case Stirs Interest.

Fearful that a complete breakdown of zoning authority faces the Washington-Maryland Metropolitan area as a result of an injunction granted by the Montgomery County Circuit Court restraining enforcement of a zoning ordinance, county residents are anxiously awaiting word from the county commissioners concerning the fate of business regulations.

County officials were besieged with telephone calls yesterday after it was revealed exclusively in The Post that the commissioners have been enjoined from interfering with Peter Fritz in the operation of the Log Cabin Inn, near Wheaton, notwithstanding the fact it is located on residential property where commercial use is forbidden by zoning ordinance.

F. Barnard Welsh, counsel for the board, has been confined to his home with illness for several weeks and other members of the board were afraid to express an opinion until Welsh has examined the bill of complaint.

J. Bond Smith, counsel for the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, the constitutionality of which has been challenged by Fritz, is out of the county and will not return until next Monday, and several other officials of that commission are en route to Fort Worth, Tex., to attend a national convention.

Although the injunction restrains the county commissioners from enforcement of zoning ordinances, the park and planning commission, created in 1927 by the Maryland General Assembly, determines most of the zoning regulations. It is this fact on which Fritz largely bases his contention that the planning body is unconstitutional, claiming that the county commissioners are delegating authority to another agency contrary to constitutional requirements.

Destroying the park and planning commission means destruction of zoning in Montgomery and Prince Georges counties since the present setup requires that body to recommend zoning ordinances to be enacted by the county commissioners as district council. The county board may, and occasionally does, disregard the park and planning body's recommendations, but since the existing zoning ordinances were adopted under that program they all will be invalidated if the park and planning commission is held unconstitutional.

Gardens of Bible Discussed in Talk

Purcellville, Va., Sept. 26.—Mrs. J. B. Frantz, of Woodstock, Va., gave an interesting talk on "Gardens of the Bible" at the monthly meeting of the Purcellville Garden Club held yesterday in the community rooms of the new Purcellville library. Mrs. Frantz started with the Garden of Eden and described many Biblical gardens, both in the Old Testament and the New. She pointed out that mostly trees were found in the gardens of the Bible and water was important to the locations. She told of the Hanging Gardens of Babylon and the festive gardens spoken of in Esther, as well as the New Testament gardens.

Winners in the exhibits were: Chrysanthemums, Mrs. Howard Rogers, first; Mrs. J. S. Patterson, second; Miss Ma A. Simpson, third. Dahlias, Mrs. H. M. Hoge, first; Mrs. J. F. Potts, second; Mrs. J. S. D. C. Churchman Assails U. S. for Inactivity in War

Wilbur La Roe, jr., chairman of the civic affairs committee for the Federation of Churches, yesterday stated "there are situations in international relations under which nonaction under the guise of peace is synonymous with selfishness and cowardice." Dr. Mann's 'Ark' Docks Today; 'Keep Fingers Crossed,' He Says

By Gerald G. Gross

New York, Sept. 26.—Local zoo heads, scientists and museum curators waited impatiently tonight for the debarkation some time tomorrow of the greatest collection of wild animals from the Orient ever to enter the port of New York.

The freighter Silverash, bearing Washington Zoo Director William M. Mann, his expedition and their huge cargo of strange animals, birds and reptiles, is expected to dock tomorrow forenoon at Pier 9, Staten Island.

Plans for transfer of the snarling, growling, cheeping cargo from ship to vans to express cars are virtually completed and, barring unforeseen complications, the largest and oddest consignment in the history of any American zoo will reach Washington tomorrow night.

The Capital will have to wait two weeks, however, for its first glimpse of the giraffes, tiny mouse deer with pencil-thin legs, Asiatic wild cattle and those other specimens which must undergo a quarantine period at nearby Athenia, N. J., before proceeding to their pens in National Zoological Park.

Due Here Within Week.

Virtually all the large beasts in the collection, except tapirs and giant reptiles, come under the quarantine requirements. But the extremely rare amethystine python, "Hari," tiger mascot of the expedition; "Wrestler," the orang-utan, so-called because he likes to grip hands; the funny shoebill storks and hundreds of other specimens should be on exhibition in Washington before next week-end.

Dr. Mann and his assistants on the eight-month odyssey—Mrs. Mann, Roy Jennier, Malcolm Davis, and Lyang Gaddi, the efficient and bespectacled descendant of Dyak head hunters in Borneo—will supervise unloading at the pier, truck transport to the train shed, and loading into the express cars, in which they will ride with their precious charges on the final lap of the eventful journey.

Itinerary Given.

Following is the itinerary and mileage of the Silverash, prepared especially for the writer by Capt. H. Rowe, in transporting its wild cargo more than half way around the world:

Batavia, Java, to Pamanukan, 75 miles; Pamanukan to Cheribon, 86; Cheribon to Samarang, 111; Samarang to Telokbetong, Sumatra, 333; Telokbetong to Singapore, Straits Settlement, 575; Singapore to Point Swettenham, 211; Point Swettenham to Bellawan Deli, 181; Bellawan Deli to Penang, 151; Penang to Colombo, Ceylon, 1,278; Colombo to Bombay, 889; Bombay to Karachi, 513; Karachi to Port Sudan, 2,144; Port Sudan to Port Said, 792; Port Said to Halifax, 4,806; Halifax to Boston, 380; Boston to New York, 328.

Dragon From Afar.

The Komodo dragon aboard the Silverash has piled up the greatest sea miles, having been loaded in Batavia. Most of the more than 1,000 specimens were put on the freighter in Singapore and Bellawan Deli, Sumatra.

The giraffes have been passengers since Port Sudan. A special stop was made at Colombo, Ceylon, to pick up the rock squirrels, which will be the only ones on exhibition in the United States.

The services, held in connection with the fourteenth anniversary of Dr. Freeman's consecration as Bishop of Washington, brought together more than 2,000 of the 16,000 persons he has confirmed as head of the Washington diocese. He centered his address on a text of the Apostle Paul "Watch ye stand fast in the faith. Be strong."

"At a time when many countries show a tendency away from the teachings of our ancient religion, there is a tremendous need for a fresh emphasis on faith, and for continuous, unfailing support of the larger purpose of the church," he said.

Bishop Freeman led the gathering in renewal of their confirmation vows. A letter of greeting to Bishop Freeman from the Rev. Herbert S. Smith, D. D., rector of St. Margaret's parish and senior rector of the diocese, was read by W. Sinclair Bowen.

The Rev. Clyde Brown, diocesan missioner, opened the services with a brief reading from St. Matthew, and the Rev. William D. Moody, rector of St. Mark's parish, read the lesson. The Rev. Franklin J. Bohanan, rector of the Rock Creek Parish, led the congregation in saying the apostle's creed, and the Rev. Oliver Hart led the prayer.

A combined choir, including the Cathedral choir and others from the Episcopal choirs of the National Choral Union, led the singing.

3-Foot Boats Hit 30 M.P.H. In Own Regatta on D. C. Pool

Long Island City Entry Wins; Several of Craft Upset, but This Sport Eliminates Ducking for Operator.

The mild breeze which ruffled the waters of the Reflecting Pool made it choppy going for the 30 powerful craft entered in the National Model Power Boat Association's annual meet yesterday. Several of the boats came to grief in the wavelets as they roared around the 314-foot circle course at a speed of over 30 miles per hour.

Their owners escaped a ducking, however. Miniatures of actual racing motor boats, these vessels ranged from 2 to 3 feet in length and many of them weighed less than six pounds.

A pole erected in the center of a pool acted as a pivot for the course. A wire fastened to it was attached to each boat in turn to keep it from hurtling down the length of the pool. A lever fixed to the ignition of the boat permitted the officials to cut off the engine when it had completed the required five laps.

This year's entries came from New York City, Detroit, Connecticut and Iowa. Their owners included a newspaperman, a famous chef, an artist and a farmer. J. M. Buckley, who raced his Petrel, was the only representative of Washington's Miniature Regatta Association. Only girl in the meet was 14-year-old Joelann Rapp, of Flushing, N. Y.

The men who own the boats also design and manufacture them, since it is impossible to buy one. The steel and plywood used in their manufacture costs comparatively little, but the time and effort required in their construction make them very valuable to their owners.

One of the racers yesterday, dissatisfied with the performance of his entry, suddenly lost interest in the sport and announced his intention of wrecking the boat against the sea wall. Thereupon, Anthony Orth, of Wilmington, whose Acoelb II was entered in the 225 class of the President's Cup Regatta and who was a timekeeper for the miniature event, purchased the model for $10.

Henry Parohl, Long Island City watchmaker, had no complaints to make about his Eleanor III. She skittered around the course at 32.6 miles per hour, winning the Class A event and the meet. The name of his boat, holder of the world's record of 38.8 miles per hour, will be inscribed once more on the Walter Elliott Memorial trophy for model power boats.

In Class B, for boats between 6 and 12 pounds, the winner was Juno II, owned by John B. Thorpe, of New York. Atom III, owned by Archie Kimmel, of New York, won in Class C, for boats under 6 pounds. All three winners were operated by gasoline, although some of the entries were steam-propelled.

The gas engines turn up as many as 15,000 revolutions per minute, according to Buckley, which is more than any engine used commercially can do. They have from one to eight cylinders. Their spark plugs are of a standard commercial make but are so small that they sometimes are used as earrings by the sportsmen's wives.

Steam-operated engines produce as much as 500 pounds of pressure per square inch. A blow torch is used to heat the boilers. Most of the boats are started with a cord, although one entrant has devised a self-starter for his.

The meet started early yesterday, and the lucky entrants were the ones who drew slips entitling them to race among the first.

"The engines are so small that every factor plays an important part in their operation," an official explained. "In the morning the air molecules are packed more closely together and therefore the engine gets more air with its gas."

Other officials at the meet were Stewart Evans, of Wilmington, and J. D. Wallace and G. E. Emig, of Washington, who kept the scores.

Noll Urges More Power For Catholics

Unification Mapped for Influence Supreme Over Opposition.

"We must wield greater influence over our 100,000,000 non-Catholic fellow Americans," the Most Rev. John F. Noll told nearly 1,000 members attending the seventeenth annual convention of the National Council of Catholic Women, at the Mayflower Hotel last night.

In a strong plea for collective Catholic action, the Most Rev. Mr. Noll, in his keynote address, said:

"The lay Catholic has pressing religious duties to perform both as an individual and as a soldier of Christ. He should live as a saint within his own little sphere and spread the spirit of Christ and join forces with every other member of Christ's body for the salvation of society.

The Catholic Church is not only the most widespread but the most perfectly organized society on earth, he added.

Stating, however, that members united in the Catholic faith were estranged by reasons of nationality, language, customs, prejudices, parochial clannishness and other reasons, he recommended three changes in the present system of the church.

A federation of Catholic parish units into a diocesan whole; a federation of dioceses on a national basis, federation of adherents of the church internationally by the linking together of every national subdivision, "so that there might be compact Kingdom of Christ on earth, whose unified influence could not be successfully opposed."

The Right Rev. Mgr. Michael J. Ready, general secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, delivered an address in memory of the Rev. Mgr. John J. Burke, C. S. P., first general secretary, who died in 1926.

Pope's Message Read.

A message from Pope Pius to the assembly was read by the Most Rev. Edward Mooney, Archbishop of Detroit, at the pontifical high mass at the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception. It said:

"The sovereign Pontiff graciously sends the National Council of Catholic Women in convention assembled under the presidency of Bishop Noll, the apostolic benediction in pledge of Divine enlightenment of their deliberations and of plenteous personal grace."

Today's program includes 8 o'clock mass at St. Matthew's Church and the appointment of convention committees at the opening session at 9:30 a. m. in the grand ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel. Three luncheons will be given at 12:30 at the hotel and discussions of education and international relations will be held.

Comic Ad Libs Out of a Hole Into One Worse

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Sept. 26.—That old sailor, W. C. Fields, swings up the gangplank of the good ship Gigantic today and when he is finished with it—Whoosie!

Even Director Mitchell Leisen isn't quite sure what is happening. The picture in production on the Paramount lot is "The Big Broadcast," in which Fields is playing the part of George T. Bellows, big-shot.

The deck of the Gigantic, a liner so ultra-modern that even the steering wheel is streamlined, is reproduced in full size on stage three.

The bulbous-nosed Fields, wearing a checkered coat and the pompous grin which has helped to make him one of the Nation's leading comedians, strolls down the deck and bumps into the captain.

Muffs His Lines.

So far so good, because that's all in the script, but Fields then forgets his lines. The cameras are grinding, so he blurts:

"Say, have you got a telegram for me?"

The captain, who is a veteran actor, too, snaps back with the information that he is no messenger boy, even though his uniform is blue.

"Well, turn around and take me ashore," says Fields, still ad libbing.

"Can't," the captain retorts. "We've already gone to sea and passed the third bar."

"You should have stopped at the first one," Fields replies, looking thirsty. By then the whole crew is smiling, and even Fields' straight face is beginning to crack into a laugh. He does the scene over again. It still isn't performed as written, but it sounds so funny that Leisen orders it printed.

Turns Directors Gray.

Fields is said to be one of the most lovable—and most difficult—actors in pictures with whom to work. The trouble seems to be that he's always thinking of new funny business, which he inserts into the proceedings as he goes along. That messes up the records of the script girls, and turns directors prematurely gray.

It also has a bad effect on the other actors. They only laugh when they're supposed to, if the script is being followed. When Fields introduces wisecracks of his own, they laugh when they ought to be scowling and the resultant cost of time and film and what-not, to use Hollywood's favorite phrase, is terrific.

The veteran comic, incidentally is looking better than he has for years. He has recovered from his recent illness. He even has sworn off strong drink. Not only that, he delivers lectures to his associates on the merits of temperance.

Gayety

"PAGEANT OF FOLLY." James J. Lake presents the musical production in two acts and 24 scenes, featuring Harry "Hickey" LeVan and Billy Foster, supported by Danny Jacobs, Evelyn Whitney, Marion Mason, Pearl Mylie, Benson and Hartzell, Letty Bolles and Curtis and Virginia. Dance numbers produced by Frank Bryant; staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by Art John, BCAA.

Starting just a trifle more slowly than is typical of the variety shows appearing here this season, Col. Lake's current production gathers more speed and sparkle as it goes along, with a grand finale that emphasizes all the excellent items the attraction has to offer.

Perhaps it is too early in the season to form any definite opinion as to the outstanding qualities and features of these variety bills, but it seems that great stress has been laid upon the comedy element, abounding in this and previous shows. As an example, this hodge-podge of fun has two witty personalities whose talents are never in doubt, namely, Harry LeVan and Billy Foster.

Of the two, LeVan leaves the deeper and more lasting impression. This chap is making his initial bow of the year here and from the brand of comedy he purveys, it seems evident that Mr. Hirst has employed a fellow who should more than repay the investment. LeVan is the type of person who is in there every minute, working for the audience and giving all he has—and that's plenty. Imagine, if you can, a comedian who is not only very, very funny, but who can sit down to a piano and tickle the "horse teeth" a bit better than some specialty numbers seen on F street and heard on the radio. If there is any doubt in your minds, then drop down and hear Mr. LeVan.

Parade of Beauty.

The parade of beauty girls includes Evelyn Whitney and Marion Mason. The former is a charming brunette, who sings several appropriate songs and makes her appearances, although brief, quite worthwhile, while Miss Mason proves a clever and talented dancer, seen too little after intermission.

Almost stealing the spotlight from these two beauties is dark-eyed Pearl Mylie. Miss Mylie delivers several songs in an engaging manner and proves a valuable asset in the numerous sketches.

Curtis and Virginia contribute several songs in the colorful and refreshing ballet numbers, while Benson and Hartzell offer something novel in dancing. Danny Jacobs is capable in his "straight man" character and the ensemble makes the musical interludes everything they are intended to be.

Star Styles Will Glorify Gloves

Claudette Colbert's fall wardrobe, so far, includes dozens of pairs of the new colored gloves so important in the fashion spotlight. In planning her costumes for "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," her next starring picture, Miss Colbert is selecting dresses to go with certain pairs of these novel gloves. The colors range from Venetian pink to gray, brown, yellow and green.

Studies Cutting.

Edward G. Robinson, on loan to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for "The Last Gangster," chooses to lunch with the film cutters at their private table in the commissary. He says he is particularly interested in getting the fine points of film editing.

'Madame Bovary,' in Premiere at National on Oct. 4, Reflects Real Characters About Rouen 80 Years Ago

Flaubert Wrote Actual Life Into Famous Novel Offered in Play Form by Theater Guild; Loew's Books Famous Stage Attractions; August 'Box-Office Champions;' Fight Films on View; Notes.

IN THIS era of the motion picture's overwhelming predominance as a source of mass entertainment, not too much is known by the rank and file of theatergoers concerning the genesis of living drama or the figures of importance in the traditional theater and the older works of standard fiction. The film-nurtured public, it seems, is not alone in the obscurity of its knowledge.

BELL.

The Theater Guild's helpful Mr. Elmer Kenyon points out, for example, that only the natives in the villages about Rouen and intimate friends of the novelist Flaubert knew that he had drawn Madame Bovary, heroine of the drama coming to the National for its premiere October 4, from real life and narrated her story in minute detail. Her name was Delphine Coutourier, and her husband, Charles Bovary in the book, was Eugene Delamare.

Even her two lovers live in the novel as the villagers remembered them, and the apothecary, Homais, was exactly the amusingly pretentious character in the flesh that he is in the fictional portrait.

Among the investigators who visited the scene of Flaubert's drama and discovered these facts was the actress, Georgette Leblanc, once the wife of the distinguished Belgian poet and dramatist, Maurice Maeterlinck, who reported them as late as 1908, although the novel first appeared in 1857.

"Madame Bovary" is published in numerous editions in this country, of course, and it is impossible to determine how many copies have been sold in the last 80 years, but after it was added to one publisher's "Modern Library" series in 1918, over 100,000 copies were sold in nine years and new plates ordered in 1927. That should give you a rough idea.

Incidentally, it is not generally known, Mr. Kenyon points out, that the world's virtual creator of the short-story form, Guy de Maupassant, was launched on his brilliant career by Flaubert. Because de Maupassant was the son of Flaubert's dearest friend, the younger man was regarded almost as a son by the elder and learned the art of writing under the severe criticism of Flaubert, who, himself, was known to be so exacting that sometimes he struggled for days to find precisely the right word. This may serve as a partial explanation of why it took him five years to write "Madame Bovary."

That carnival of clout, celebrated by "Uncle" Mike Jacobs in New York last Thursday night, went on the screen at Sidney Lust's Cameo Theater, in Mount Rainier, Md., Saturday for a week of continuous showings, as the motion picture cameras caught the fracas. For this event, Impresario Jacobs, the new Tex Rickard of the ring, assembled practically all of the champions, under the light-heavyweight class, who had nothing else to do on that particular evening. Some of the leather-heavers fought and others merely fumbled, but such goings-on as took place, the lustful Mr. Lust now has on view just abaft the District line. The pictures are shown daily from early afternoon until midnight, as nearly every hour, on the hour, as the length of the film will permit.

Feeling that overemphasis may have been placed upon the superlative quality of the new season's film output, Division Manager Carter Barron and his associate executives of the Washington office of Loew's, Inc., r'ar back and pass another miracle in the matter of stage attractions and don't care who knows it.

During the remainder of the current month, as well as through October and November, one is told that many formidable attractions will decorate the stage of Loew's Capitol Theater. Most of them already have been definitely booked.

A few among the many include Little Jackie Heller, who will return in a different capacity than any he has heretofore revealed to the National Capital. Jackie on his next trip will be seen and heard as a singing master of ceremonies presiding over an elaborate stage revue. Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, recently seen as the backbone of the film production of "Varsity Show," with Dick Powell and Ted Healy, will bring a completely new revue to the Capitol boards. Fred, to all intents and purposes, "grew up" musically in Washington and will be welcomed back by a host of ardent enthusiasts who still think he has the best band in the country, what with "Poly" McClintock, "Scotty" Bates, Brother Tom, Rosemary and Priscilla Lane and all.

Dave Apollon, the acrobatic and high-voltage expatriated Russian, is another who will be back with one of his most pretentious stage shows and the Salici Puppets is still another novelty in the offing. The Salici troupe of strings and marionettes will come here from an engagement of several months at the Texas Exposition.

To this nucleus will be added surrounding stars and satellites calculated to demonstrate to the satisfaction of all and sundry that vaudeville is not even sleeping, let along dead.

In "The Bride Wore Red," coming to the Palace upon the conclusion of the current run of "Dead End," Joan Crawford will dance for the first time on the screen since "Dancing Lady." Miss Crawford will have two leading men in her new vehicle, Husband Franchot Tone and Robert Young, a couple of likely young fellows of whom you may have heard. The star is reported to have gone into vigorous training for her intricate dance routines, putting in two hours each morning and afternoon on the stretching bar and her talented pedals. Those stretching bars are no joke—ask anyone.

Six feature productions, all viewed and approved—in varying degrees—in Washington, emerged as the "Boxoffice Champions for August" in the Motion Picture Herald's monthly tabulation of bona fide box-office statements from the country's key cities.

The half dozen, in the order of their listing, are "You Can't Have Everything," "Artists and Models," "Wee Willie Winkie," "Saratoga," "The Good Earth" and "The Road Back." The dog-days yen for light and flippant entertainment is reflected in the national popularity of "You Can't Have Everything," "Artists and Models" and "Saratoga," all of which ran largely to tunes, or comedy, or both.

These ratings, it will be noted, give a slight bulge in productional perspicacity to Twentieth Century-Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with two winners each. The other two divide themselves between Paramount and Universal.

What! No "Captains Courageous"?

The downtown playhouses have suffered some keen competition these past few days and it has been registered at the ticket wickets on the negative side. With the beginning of the professional football season, the President's Cup Regatta, perfect touring weather and whatnot, the lure of the open has been almost more than the indoor traffic could stand. The next few days should lead to the public discovery that some of the best pictures of the year are currently on view. After a tragic early week, by the way, "Susan and God," at the National, pulled up Saturday night with a fine gross to its credit, everything considered. So there is at least some small dab of balm still left in Gilead.

Still Carves Fame With Skates

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Sept. 26.—Memories that bless and burn: When Helene Chadwick, now an extra, won $2,500 on a single race at Agua Caliente. When Lew Ayres, clad in tophat and tails, stopped while en route to his wedding with Ginger Rogers, to eat a hamburger. When Estelle Taylor walked out on her husband, Jack Dempsey, at a Cocoanut Grove party because she objected to the broken-down prize fighters he had invited. When Evalyn Knapp, on her first deep-sea fishing trip, fought a 200-pound swordfish for three hours—and landed it.

ESTELLE TAYLOR.

When Richard Headrick, an early child star, "assed" his father on the set—and received a sound spanking in view of the entire company. When gloria Stuart used to give "break o' day" swimming parties at Laguna Beach. When a not-too-dignified admiral attended a swimming party at the Powell-Lombard mansion—and wore the Negro cook's bathing suit because he had forgotten his own. When Lupe Velez, feuding with Jetta Goudal, hired a taxi driver to race his motor under her enemy's windows at 3 o'clock in the morning.

When Janet Gaynor, during an interview about her beloved stepfather, who had just died, became so hysterical that production of her picture was delayed for two days. When Lew Cody and Norma Kerry traded punches on the dance floor of the Ambassador Hotel. When a fan magazine writer climbed the garden wall and snapped a picture of Garbo taking a sun bath; he was barred from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer until he destroyed the negative. When Jeanette MacDonald tore up a starring contract with Fox rather than play in a picture entitled "She Wore the Pants."

One of the more amusing publicity tid-bits of recent weeks is the announcement that the elder Fairbanks and Gilbert Roland, has made more than one enemy who would gladly have paid more than a pesky thousand for a good sock at him.

Here's a story O. Henry would have liked. For eight years a Japanese named Hosakawa worked at Paramount, retouching photographs. People pointed him out as the perfect proof that a Japanese can go completely American. He had been married four times and each of his wives had been white. All of his personal friends were whites and he carried on all of his private business with banks and stores operated by white Americans. In fact, the only Oriental Hosakawa even knew was a second Japanese retoucher who worked in another cubbyhole at the same studio. But they rarely spoke and no one ever saw them leave the studio together.

Two years ago, Hosakawa became ill; last week he died. And it was discovered that he had saved a surprising amount of money and willed it all—to the other Japanese retoucher.

Anyone who enjoys life's little ironies is never bored in Hollywood. For instance, there is the case of Gladys George, now one of the most "in-demand" actresses. Two years ago, a Paramount talent scout named Serlin saw Gladys in a play, made lengthy tests of her and rushed them to the studio with the prediction that she could become a topflight star. Paramount's executives looked at tests and decided Serlin was crazy. They not only rejected Gladys but put their chief talent scout on the pan for spending money to test so unpromising a prospect. M.-G.-M., a month or two later, signed her—and promptly farmed her out (at an enormous price) to Paramount—the studio that hadn't been able to see her—for the star role in "Valiant is the Word for Carrie." Paramount's picture made her a great star and M.-G.-M. gets the benefit. And today I learned that Paramount has handed out a circular letter to all of its talent scouts, ordering them to search for a "Gladys George" type!

Belasco

The relative importance of heredity and environment in the formation of character, long a question of concern among social workers, forms a basis of "Sex Madness," the daring film play that yesterday supplanted "Birth" as major feature of the week's bill on the screen at the Belasco Theater.

The central figure in the drama is a girl born of questionable parentage who is reared in an atmosphere of refinement and irreproachable decorum. Fate decrees, however, that she shall revert to the moral laxities that had placed something of a stigma upon the name of her mother. In later years, the two meet and the mother launches an intensely dramatic defense of the erring girl.

Curt Von Resarf, eminent screen technician, wrote the story which is said to be based on fact. As a companion attraction, the bill includes "False Shame," another subject of similar nature. On the stage, "Radio's Friendly Adviser," described as the "man with 1,000 experiences," continues to deliver illuminating comment upon the pictured features of the program, in person.

Added short subjects and news events that appealed to the eye of the cameramen round out the entertainment—if social hygiene may be said to come under the head of environment.

Blanket Coat.

Florence Rice has designed a "football coat" particularly appropriate since she is an ardent grid fan It is made of a football blanke and carries out her school colors with the emblem at center back of the coat.

Little

This tribute to the musical content of "Forever Yours" is no more than an acknowledgment of its worth commensurate with the high artistry of its star. Gigli is prodigal in his contributions to the vocal eminence of this film. During the action of the simple little romantic play, he sings nine arias of his own choice from a repertoire that embraces all of the major works of grand opera. Some are repeated from time to time, making of this subject a glorious carnival of song.

The dramatic fiber of the story of "Forever Yours" falls something short of what might be wished for the screen debut of an artist of such distinction, but there still is sufficient substance in the tale to demonstrate Gigli's comprehension of the requirements of screen comedy and to afford Joan Gardner adequate opportunity as the figure of prime interest and importance in the play. The remainder of the supporting cast is adequate, if not in any sense exceptional. Master Richard Gofe even manages to be exceptional among the screen's very young performers.

"The March of Time," added short subjects and newsreel complete the bill.

October Films Assure Laughs For Audiences

October will be a month for the lovers of laughter in the Hollywood film mills with that greatest lover of them all, W. C. Fields, strutting at the head of the production parade. Fields, after his year of inactivity in front of the cameras, again is on the sound stages for his starring role in "The Big Broadcast of 1938," with a cast of supporting players numbering Martha Raye, Dorothy Lamour, Ben Blue and a host of other favorites.

Claudette Colbert will don her smartest comedy cloak for the gay farce, "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," which the irrespressible Ernst Lubitsch will direct. With her will be Co-star Gary Cooper and those favorites, Edward Everett Horton and Luis Alberni, with others yet to be named.

Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray and John Barrymore continue the maddest parts of their careers in "True Confession," which Wesley Ruggles is bringing to the screen. His last picture, it will be recalled, was that smart Claudette Colbert romance, "I Met Him in Paris." Just for good comedy measure Una Merkel and Edgar Kennedy head the supporting cast.

In more tender mood is scheduled "The Yellow Nightingale," in which lovely Gladys Swarthout and John Boles will co-star, with able support from Muriel Hutchison and Joseph Schildkraut. A romantic comedy with music, this will start around the first of the month.

Balance being required on all studio schedules, drama of the most virile sort will be headed toward the screen when Paramount launches "Spawn of the North," with a cast probably to be headed by Fred MacMurray and Frances Farmer, who recently appeared together in "Exclusive." This picture of the Alaska salmon runs and river piracy will be directed by Henry (Souls at Sea) Hathaway.

George Raft will depart from his customary type of characterization for an unusual love story now titled "Dream of Love," but to receive a new designation before the production starts the latter part of the month.

Other pictures being made ready to bring the October production list up to seven, are "Prison Farm," a mystery with the intriguing title "The 13th Bed in the Ballroom," and a Zane Grey outdoor romance, "The Mysterious Rider."

NOTRE DAME WINS IN PRESIDENT'S CUP REGATTA

The Washington Post Sports

* WASHINGTON: MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1937. 15

This Morning

Under the Hammer Goes Game Mare.

By Shirley Povich.

Down in the blue grass, at Lexington, Ky., next month, the auctioneer's hammer will fall and some breeder will come into possession of the mare which almost unfailingly rewarded Washington racegoers for their faith in blood stock.

It's Comixa, now the 17-year-old dam of an illustrious line of racers that Willis Sharpe Kilmer is selling at the annual Lexington sales—one of the 29 brood mares he is shipping from his famous farm at Court Manor, Va.

The Washington racegoer is always ready to tell you about Comixa—how the track handicappers kept piling weight on the filly and how she continued to win stake after stake. Because Comixa was a prime favorite with Capital turf fans. She was Washington-owned in her racing days back in '23, '24 and '25, one of the stable of Edward B. McLean, and her presence in any race was enough to send the faithful scurrying to the mutuel windows.

• • • •

Comixa was beaten, of course, but it was her gameness that the racegoers liked. And when they matched her with the supposed best in her division, Comixa came galloping down in front no less than six times in important stake races. Campaigning chiefly in Maryland, the filly showed the way to the fields in the Annapolis Highweight Handicap, the Wicomico, the Biscayne, the Schuylkill, the Bayou and the Hotel Ritz purse.

• • • •

It was the Annapolis Highweight that Comixa followers remember best, perhaps. It was a race for all ages and Comixa was one of the two fillies in the affair. Despite her sex, Comixa was saddled with the imposing burden of 129 pounds, 14 more than the filly Vrana was assigned and a pound more than the clever colt General Thatcher.

• • • •

With Jockey Eddie Scobie on her back, Comixa, always a fast breaker, didn't miss this time. She was out in front from the No. 2 post position and they never did catch her. At the stretch turn, despite those 129 pounds, she was flying with a three-length lead. Comixa lovers got $19.80 for their $2 mutuel tickets.

• • • •

The filly came from illustrious parentage. Her sire was no less than McLean's unbeaten Colin which won all of its 15 races and $181,610 in purses . . . As a brood mare, Comixa produced the sensational Promiscuous, which won 14 races.

• • • •

The complaints against Manager Steve O'Neill are plenty and it is being recurrently reported even now that he is through as the Cleveland manager, but today he stands revealed as the maker of the shrewdest player deal in recent years in the big leagues.

• • • •

It was during the winter of 1935-36 at the Chicago trading session that O'Neill wrangled Johnny Allen away from the New York Yankees in a deal in which Cleveland gave up Pitcher Monte Pearson to New York. Well, all Allen has done for the Indians since the 1936 season opened has been to win 34 games while losing ten.

• • • •

And when Allen beat the Tigers yesterday, it was his fourteenth straight victory. And if you want to go farther and actually credit Allen with all his victories since he last tasted defeat, you can add on also his last three wins of the 1936 season which gives him a record of seventeen straight.

• • • •

The Yankees plucked Allen from behind a hotel desk in North Carolina a half dozen years ago and he was an immediate pitching success despite his flaring temper. In the years he has been in the league, he has compiled the impressive record of 84 games won against only 29 defeats.

• • • •

They had Allen on the radio yesterday after his defeat of the Tigers and the radio interviewer asked him what his great ambition as a pitcher would be. Specifically, he asked. "Johnny, in what particular column would you prefer to lead the league—the won and lost column, the earned run column or the strikeout column." He wasn't long getting his answer.

• • • •

"All those columns are all right, my friend," Allen replied, "but the column I want to lead the league in is the salary column."

• • • •

Sheriff Dave Harris, the Jack Keefe character, and Coach Johnny Kerr were roomates with the Nats back in the early thirties, Harris, who considered himself the greatest natural hitter ever to grace the American League, had a fine contempt for Kerr's own hitting record in the majors, and often said so.

"Whyinell I have to room with a .220 hitter, I don't know," Harris said kiddingly to Kerr one night.

3-Run Lead By Kohlman Wiped Out

By Shirley Povich.

In the parlance of the prize ring, the Athletics stood up and got a draw yesterday at Griffith Stadium. They stood up at the plate in the ninth inning and swatted the relief pitching of Wes Ferrell for three runs to tie the game at 7-7, figures that were still on the scoreboard at the end of the eleventh inning when Hizzoner Bill McGowan took a look at the gathering dusk and said it was too dark to play any more.

There was a loser, though. It was young Joe Kohlman, fresh from Salisbury in the Eastern Shore League, who was brutally deprived of a victory in his major league pitching debut. He had won his game, apparently, when the Nats scored three runs for him in the eighth to take a 7-4 lead.

In the midst of that eighth-inning uprising, Kohlman had been benched for a pinch hitter and the Nats' three-run lead was entrusted to the veteran Wes Ferrell. It was an unhappy choice by Manager Bucky Harris because Ferrell had a horrible time of it getting the A's out in the ninth and never did get 'em out until Bob Johnson had driven in the tying runs.

Relied on Curve Ball.

There wasn't a great deal wrong with Kohlman's pitching. The rookie, relying chiefly on the curve ball that won him 26 straight in the Maryland league, including two no-hit performances, never did permit the A's to get very far out of hand. He gave up nine hits in the eight innings he pitched, but he was always well within himself and at least one of the runs he gave up was badly tainted.

Those two runs the A's scored on him in the third inning, for example, evolved from Newsome's double that took a freak hop over Buddy Lewis' head, a balk that young Kohlman committed and two singles. And when the A's tied the score at 4-4 in the seventh, it was a stolen base by Newsome that put the run in scoring position.

Young Jimmy Wasdell, who already had had a large afternoon, what with his triple in the first inning, his double in the fourth and his single in the fifth, encouraged the Nats to untie the score in the eighth when he lammed out his fourth straight hit, a single to center. Harry Kelley was pitching for the A's at the time and he fell on evil times.

Young George Case followed with a single to left, and after Bloodworth had sacrificed, Rick Ferrell was purposely passed, filling the bases. That's where Buddy Myer came in—as a pinch hitter for Kohlman and he singled to center to put the Nats in front, 6-4. Lewis' single to center made it 7-4.

Ferrell Takes Mound.

Then Ferrell took up the pitching for the Nats and had very little success. Bloodworth put him on the spot when he threw Pinch Hitter Chibby Dean's grounder so wildly that it hit Dean on the head, knocking him out. Dean was safe on Bloodworth's error. Then, with one out, Moses and Pinch Hitter Nelson singled to left to narrow the Nats' lead to 7 to 5.

Pinch Hitter Bill Werber hit into a force play, but then he daringly stole second to put the two tying runs in scoring position. They didn't linger in scoring position long because Bob Johnson made the fourth hit of the inning—a single to center—and it was 7 to 7.

Ferrell checked the A's after that, but, meanwhile, Dick Nelson was no drawback to the Athletics. After contributing his pinch hit to the A's ninth-inning uprising, all Nelson did after that was to walk to the pitching mound and hold the Nats to no hits, whatsoever, in their last three innings.

Underwood & Underwood.

later shoved off in his wife's boat, Miss Palm Beach, to take third in the American speedboat championship.

Juno, only a few yards behind Notre Dame, spilled when Rutherfurd was unable to lift his feet from the accelerator as it struck the Notre Dame's backwash.

Count Theo Rosi de Montelera, of Turin, Italy, sent his Alagi roaring over the course at 68.802 for one lap, to shatter the mark Rutherfurd's Juno set Saturday.

Final standings in the President's Cup race, for three 15-m"e laps, or a total of 45 gruelling miles, gave Notre Dame 1,400 points, the Italian Alagi 1,250, and Lieut. Guido Cattaneo's Aradam 525.

Alagi Shows Speed.

But the third and final heat, Alagi, which has notched 90 miles an hour, showed her brilliant speed, leaving Notre Dame half a mile behind her at the finish.

A bad last at the start of the second heat put Alagi hopelessly behind Notre Dame and Juno, to finish third after Juno tore herself to pieces.

Sixty-one-year-old Jack Cooper turned in the most spectacular performance of the day by winning the 225-cubic-inch hydroplane free-for-all in two straight heats. The white-haired auton obile man from Kansas City, Mo., gave the boys another driving lesson by taking the American speedboat championship from John Charles Thomas' big runabout Smyne.

Fairly flying over the course, in his Tops II, Cooper fought off the gallant challenge of Charles F. Wheaton, of Toronto, Canada.

After zooming round the course neck and neck with Wheaton's Shadow II for two laps, Cooper fed the coal to his streamlined white speedster and galloped across the finish a scant 50 feet ahead of his rival. It was a thrilling victory that brought cheers from the crowd.

In the first heat, Black Imp II, driven by C. F. Schwarm, of Cincinnati, Ohio, capsized on a turn when she struck a wash. Schwarm was picked up uninjured and his damaged craft towed off the course.

John Charles Thomas, the opera star, lost a bitterly fought race for the American Speed Boat Championship to Jack Cooper.

Thomas drove his big runabout "Smyne" wide open down the stretches, but he couldn't quite catch the flying Missouri veteran.

The famous barytone, scored, however, in the Class K runabout event, where his white speedster had an easy time winning over David Gerli's Lady Gen III, and the only local entrant, Gardner W. Orme, who piloted Garveo II.

In the mile trials above the Highway Bridge yesterday morning, Mendelson's veteran driver, who designed Notre Dame, opened up his phenomenal creation in a desperate attempt to better the record Jack Rutherfurd's Juno hung up Saturday. The long, streamlined craft failed to reach Rutherfurd's mark of 84.606, but she raced over the measured mile to log 82.298 miles per hour.

Alice Marble Wins Coast Net Crown

Los Angeles, Sept. 26 (U.P.).—Alice Marble, back in the stride which carried her to the national championship a year ago, won the Pacific Southwest women's singles title today by defeating the defending champion, Gracyn Wheeler, of Santa Monica, in a one-sided finals match. The San Francisco miss walked away with the cup in straight sets, 6—1, 6—0.

George Patrick Hughes and Charles Hare, members of the English Davis Cup team, won the men's doubles championship with a decisive victory over Frank Shields, of Hollywood, and Jacques Brugnon, of France, 6—4, 6—2, 6—2. The winning team lost only two sets in the championship rounds.

Wilson Halts Yanks, 7-2, For Boston

Boston, Sept. 26.—The high-powered Yankees, who have already copped the American League pennant, looked like anything but champions today as a youthful Red Sox nine knocked them around, 7 to 2.

Unleashing some of the heavy artillery that the New Yorkers usually carry, Boston lashed out nine hits, among them two home runs, a triple and a double.

Eagles Hold Cardinals to 6-6 Tie; Giants Triumph Over Pirates, 10-7

Field Goal By Dodgers Beats Rams

Crayne Kicks From 21-Yd. Line in Last 3 Minutes to Win, 9-7.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 26. A sensational catch by Joe Carter, an end, of a 50-yard forward pass in the last 70 seconds of play today gave the Philadelphia Eagles a 6-to-6 tie with the Chicago Cardinals in a National League professional football game.

A crowd of 10,037 saw Carter, standing on the goal line surrounded by four Chicago players, jump into the air to snare the ball thrown by Dave Smukler on a fourth down with 9 to go. The play, good for a net gain of 31 yards, climaxed a 47-yard advance by the Eagles.

Chicago's touchdowns came early in the first quarter when Conway Baker, a tackle, blocked Emmett Mortell's kick on the Eagles' 40, recovered the ball and ran to the Eagles' 10 before being caught.

Doug Russell and George Grosvenor plunged to the 1-inch line in three plays. Then Hal Pangle hit guard for the score.

Dodgers' Field Goal Beats Rams, 9 to 7

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, Sept. 26.—A 21-yard field goal by Dick Crayne, Dodger fullback, in the last three minutes of play gave Brooklyn a 9-to-7 victory over the Cleveland Rams before 12,000 fans in a National Pro Football League game.

The surprisingly rugged Cleveland team had the game its own way from the first period until well into the last, when the Dodgers got the ball on their own 19-yard line. Joe Maniaci's 41-yard dash through the entire Ram team 2 slashed at tackle by Crayne and Ed Goddard put the ball in position for Crayne's kick.

The Rams announced they would protest to League President Joe Carr on a ruling by Referee Tom Thorp. In the third period Thorp ruled that Ralph Kercheval had attempted a lateral pass when he fumbled and voided Sam Busick's 43-yard dash with a free ball. Under professional rules, a player on the defensive team may not run with a recovered fumble on a lateral play.

Pirates Defeated by Manton's Drop-Kick

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 26.—Taldon (Tillie) Manton place-kicked a field goal from the corner of Forbes Field today to give the New York Giants a 10-to-7 victory over the hitherto undefeated Pittsburgh Pirates of the National Professional Football League.

The winning kick came early in the final period after the Pirates had stopped a 58-yard New York march on the 5-yard line. The crowd of more than 33,000 stood silently as Manton made a perfect placement from a point 11 yards out and 10 yards from the right sideline.

Sam Breadon Retains Manager Frank Frisch

St. Louis, Sept. 26 (AP).—President Sam Breadon of the St. Louis Cardinals announced today the signing of Frankie Frisch as 1938 manager of the Redbirds.

Salary terms of the one-year contract were not disclosed, but the amount was believed to be an increase over Frisch's 1937 contract. Announcement of the signing followed a short session between Breadon and the Cards' pilot prior to the first game of a double-header with the Chicago Cubs.

WITH BILL BENNINGS

Deal At: Selections at Havre de Grace.

Although it is doubtful if he will start, War Admiral, Derby and Preakness winner, has been assigned top weight of 126 pounds for Wednesday's $10,000 added Havre de Grace Handicap, sharing the impost with Cabalerro II. Thus the Glen Riddle star will have to give away poundage to older rivals. Most surprising of the weights is the fact that Aneroid has been given 124 pounds to Calumet Dick's 120. Aneroid finished far behind both Calumet Dick and Snark (in with 119) in the Narragansett Special and the heavy assignment is a disappointment to Trainer Kerr. Heelfly, winner of Saturday's Potomac, carries 119 pounds. His victory does not affect his weight for Wednesday's event. Here's something I want to harp on once more. It's the camera used here. I've forgotten it's name, but in my mind it is definitely "The Outside-Horse Finish Camera." With unfailing regularity it has given the decision to the outside horse. If memory serves, Icy Wind, in beating Albuquerque, has been the only inside horse to beat the camera and Icy Wind's margin was so decisive that the pressbox boys wrote their stories while waiting for the official result. In the case of Count Tetrarch's win Saturday, Sun Asia appeared to have taken the purse by a good head. But the camera "outsided" on backers of the inside horse. I'm trying to be modest about our record for the meeting here, but I'm going to let you have the big wind soon. Until then, hold your hats fellows. BILL.

First race—Halo was forced to race very wide in that last and showed me enough to warrant a selection in a field of this sort. I'm going to string along. Sir Steel's last was encouraging and this one promises to be a keen factor. Faerie has worked well and is an upset possibility.

Second race—Lula Khayyam ran as if soon to take down a set of brackets in those most recent efforts. She's going to get my call. The Millsdale-Pelleteri entry of Flying Wind and Puddles may take a money position. The first named turned in a good trial. Crusand is better than that last.

Third race—Spring Meadow is not a standout in this maiden field, but one that I have been watching. I'm going to try to make this the right day. Sickle Lass was unprepared for the break here the other day. Tedium is the probable favorite and promises to be a keen contender.

Fourth race—Evening Tide, despite trouble, was wearing down Little Shaver at every stride in their recent finish. I'm looking for the Schaffer colorbearer to reverse the order this time. Little Shaver is as good as those two recent wins. Alice G. for the show.

Fifth race—Careful Miss is improving gradually and may be ready to score at this time. Carvola has been rested and comes from a stable that brings them up sharp. Threadneedle galloped away with that last and is dangerous.

Sixth race—I'm going to name this one and then duck. I mean Glowing Coal. This one was cozily handled last out with indication that he wants a route. Snobby Scamp and Miss Tiptoe seem superior to the others.

Seventh race—Kincross went in the air at the break when touted as a "good thing" last out. At that, he ran a smashing race. With racing luck, he will take these into camp. Torquil closed fast here last Friday. Dizzy Dame is waiting for a spot.

Sam Breadon Retains Manager Frank Frisch

St. Louis, Sept. 26 (AP).—President Sam Breadon of the St. Louis Cardinals announced today the signing of Frankie Frisch as 1938 manager of the Redbirds.

Salary terms of the one-year contract were not disclosed, but the amount was believed to be an increase over Frisch's 1937 contract. Announcement of the signing followed a short session between Breadon and the Cards' pilot prior to the first game of a double-header with the Chicago Cubs.

Club Championships to Dr. Smith, Hollebaugh; Chevy Chase Victor

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Dr. Howard L. Smith at Congressional and Russ Hollebaugh at Kenwood won their respective club championships yesterday as eight clubs continued play in the annual fall links classics.

Upsets were sprinkled among the Manor, Indian Spring and Argyle match-play rounds, while medalists were crowned at Woodmont, Army and Navy and Capitol.

Chevy Chase, finalist in the Maryland State team matches the past four years, won over Green Spring Valley, 14 to 4, while Argyle was bowing to Rodgers Forge, 11½ to 6½, in Baltimore. Two-man team play advanced at Capitol and Beaver Dam, while the ladies' club championship finals were reached at the latter club.

Upset victor over Parker Nolan in the morning semifinals at Congressional while Gene Pittman won over District Champion Billy Shea, Dr. Smith won a 19-hole victory over Pittman in the finals, ending the match with a birdie.

Pittman, chipping and putting like a master, threw a 74 at Shea in the morning match to win on the seventeenth hole. Smith was 2 down at the half-way point in the final match, but played the back nine in 36 to send the match into extra holes.

Pittman holed a 35-foot putt on 16 for a halve and 20-footer on 17 for a win to cause the deadlock. The new champion, succeeding Parker Nolan, then placed his third shot on the extra hole 5 feet from the pin and holed the birdie putt for the title. Pittman taking a regulation par 5.

The next three holes were halved, leaving the match dormie, and Hollebaugh ended the match with a birdie on the long thirteenth by a 7 and 5 margin.

Catholic University Opens Season With 14-6 Victory Over Canisius

Post Notes on HUNTING

By Bill Ackerman.

Although the first two weeks of the railbird season were nothing to brag about from the size of the bags, it has come around in fine shape, and now, even the marshes down the Potomac, that many hunters have been claiming pretty well shot out, are producing limit bags with consistent regularity.

ACKERMAN

From direct observation during the past several days in Matawoman Creek and Piscataway, and without pushing through the reeds to stir the birds up, it would be safe to say that the flight is on a par with the best that we have had during the past five or six years.

George Bias, pusher in the Patuxent marshes at Big Point, says there are plenty of brids there, but then, this is one of the few areas in the East that has always held up. In case you would like to try it call West River 24F12. Every arrangement for boat and pusher can be made without going down until you are ready to hunt.

Many sportsmen find the early rail shooting a real diversion and get a great kick out of it, very likely because it gives them a chance to get their hand in for later shooting. Others refuse to be inveigled into hunting them, claiming that the results in no way compensate them for the trouble entailed—that the rail is too slow to supply real sport.

* * * *

Granted that the well-conditioned rail is a little lazy and slow in getting up, he still has enough speed to give the once-in-a-while hunter a swell day in the open, and, after all, isn't that all that any sportsman wants—and a mess of rails do make a great bird pie.

President Roosevelt has approved the act providing that the United States shall aid the States in wildlife restoration projects.

Sponsored by the General Wildlife Federation, it is to take effect July 1, 1938, and authorizes appropriations equal to revenue derived from Federal taxes on firearms, shells and cartridges, for a Federal-State wildlife program. Tax receipts in previous years indicate that the funds may total about $3,000,000 annually.

Projects to be financed by the new funds will include the selection, acquisition, and development of areas for wildlife, making for the first time funds from taxes from sporting goods available for improving wildlife conditions.

* * * *

Hunting-license fees of the participating States will be used solely for wildlife purposes and be spent in accordance with a most carefully planned program. Co-operation between Federal and State wildlife officials will be furthered.

Federal participation in conservation is extended to resident and upland species, as well as migrants, but outstanding will be the restoration of land and water areas to the uses of wildlife. The prime essentials to any program for improvement.

The amount of the appropriations provided for in the new act that will be available for each State will depend on the size of the State, and the number of hunting licenses sold there. After the deduction of not more than 8 per cent of the total appropriation, for the administration of the act and for the acquisition development, and maintenance of Federal refuges, the remaining funds will be divided in half. One-half will be apportioned according to State areas, the other half according to hunting licenses sold.

On the basis of a $3,000,000 total, it is estimated that each State would have available nearly 46 cents for each square mile within its boundaries and, according to the 1935 hunting licenses reports, more than 23 cents for each license sold.

Not more than $150,000, however, is to be available to any one State in a year, and the act also provides for a minimumm allotment of $15,000.

States, according to the act, will co-operate by providing funds equal to one-third of their Federal allotments, and by carrying on the projects in accordance with Federal standards. A State's participation will follow its assent to the provisions of the act and also will depend on its enactment of wildlife conservation laws, "which shall include a prohibition against the diversion of license fees paid by hunters" for any other purpose than the administration of the State fish and game department.

Funds allotted to any State that does not desire to avail itself of the benefits of the act and funds that are not spent or obligated during the period in which they are available, may, according to the authorization of the act, be made available for carrying out the provisions of the Federal migratory bird conservation act, which provides for the establishment and maintenance of Federal bird refuges.

The new measure is considered to a great extent an outcome of the North American wildlife conference which was called in February of 1936 by President Roosevelt and which resulted in the organization of the General Wildlife Federation.

Cardinals' Line Plays Brilliantly

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 26.—A pile-driving bulldog Catholic University football team swept into Canisius College Stadium, showed the home-town boys a slashing 60 minutes of scrimmage today and swept out with a 14-6 victory in their belts.

C. U. line, figured to be outweighed and outplayed by their opponents in pre-game dope, rolled back Canisius without a first down in the opening half. Meantime, big Burke Vidnovic passed and plunged his way over goal line in the first quarter and Frank Cairo booted the point from placement. Score stood throughout first half.

Canisius' defense found itself in the third period. Al Zeilinski, crack local center, recovered Rocco Pirro's fumble on Washington team's 33.

Edward, an outstanding back for the losing side all day, then dropped back and shot two forwards that put ball on C. U.'s 10-yard line.

Drops Pass.

Zuchowski missed his try for point and C. U. took over from there on. They added another score when Wayne Ambrose broke through and put his bulk in front of Edward's proposed punt. Catholic U. linemen swarmed around the ball and finally grounded it on Canisius' 15, after a 15-yard roll.

Vidnovick, probably the hottest pass thrower on field, pitched one smack into the hands of Irish Carrol a yard from goal. Pirro rammed over and Cairo again toed the pigskin between the uprights.

Canisius, up against a keener, faster squad, missed a fine opportunity just as the third quarter ended. Carroll, C. U.'s ace back, dropped the ball coming through the line and Edward recovered on Washington's 35.

Throws to Enright.

He got up and whipped a pass to Enright on 21 and Cocaptain Ed Zuchowski bucked for 10 more. Quarantillo, substitute back, then missed a heart-twitcher in the end zone and Zuchowski's field goal experiment that would have given his team the lead sailed wide of posts.

DeShong to Face Yankees Today

The New York Yankees, baseball champions of the universe, will make their farewell 1937 appearances in Griffith Stadium today and tomorrow, when they meet the Nats in single games.

Jimmy DeShong is expected to get the pitching assignment today against the left-handed Kemp Wicker, of the Yanks.

Ring Solons Seek New Weight Class

On the grounds that the heavyweight class covers too much variation in weights, the National Boxing Association is considering the creation of a 185-pound class.

Under the present system, any fighter weighing over 175 must scrap in the unlimited heavyweight class and some time face such giants as Primo Carnera, spotting an opponent as much as 50 or more pounds.

Boxing authorities have been asked to express opinions before the association presents its recommendation of this subject to the 1938 convention.

The various State authorities also have been asked their opinions of a realignment of classes into division of 115 pounds, 125, 135, 145, 155, 165, 175, 185 and heavyweight. The present classes are 112, 118, 126, 135, 147, 160, 175, and heavy.

Pepco Vs. O'Donnell's; F. B. I. Vs. Greenbelt

The City Week Day championship series enters the quarter-final round today as unbeaten Pepco meets the once-defeated O'Donnell nine on the South Ellipse and on the North Ellipse Federal Bureau of Investigation, undefeated, faces Greenbelt, which has been beaten once. Both games at 4 p. m.

Police No. 4 Wins 2d Half of Junior League as Flood Is Upset.

By Jack Munhall.

Taking an early lead, Heurich's Brewers weathered a ninth inning home run with one aboard by Charley Booker to annex the section A championship of the National City Baseball League yesterday, nipping Rose Liquor, 6-5, before some 2,500 fans on the North Ellipse.

Holding a 6-3 advantage entering the first half of the last inning, Walter James, a surprise starter for the Beermen, weakened temporarily to pitch a single to Eddie Cinnoti whereupon Booker lugged his heavy club to the plate and deposited the ball on the South Ellipse for a terrific clout to throw a distinct scare into Mr. James.

However, Tommy Nolan pinch hitting for Ray Clark whiffed ingloriously and the threat was ended.

Heurich spotted the Liquormen a run in the first but came back to count twice in the second and added three more in the fourth to take a 5-3 lead. In the second inning Huck Stahl, shortstop veteran of 27, led off with a single and scored on Tommy Thompson's double. Thompson moved to third on Shelton's infield out and went home on an outfield fly by Radke.

In the fourth the Beermen teed off on Walter Murphy after two were out. Artie Schrivener singled and then successive singles by Tillie Scott, Stahl and Shelton accounted for the three runs.

Police Boys Club No. 4 won the second half title in the junior league, but must credit an assist to Nick Bombard, for while the Flatfeet idled the Bombards bombarded J. C. Flood, 9-6, behind steady pitching by Phil Wheatley, and eliminated the Plumbers from the race.

Presidents Lose To Patterson, 14-0

Paterson, N. J., Sept. 26 (AP).—The Patterson Panthers, undefeated leaders of the American Professional Football Association, won their fourth straight shutout victory of the year today, turning back the Washington Presidents, champions of the Dixie League in 1936, by a 14-0 score. About 7,500 fans saw the game.

The Panthers scored first when Phil Miller, former Bucknell star, skirted his own left end for 4 yards and a touchdown to climax a 75-yard drive. On the kick-off that followed Joe Vollmer, late of Columbia, intercepted a lateral pass and raced 20 yards for the other Paterson score. Harry Demming, a George Washington University product, place-kicked both extra points.

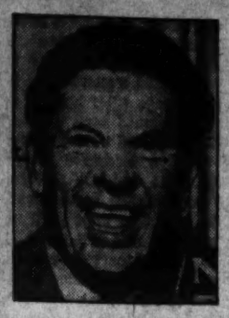
Bob Burns Says—



My Aunt Flutey and Uncle Buzz use'ta have a terrible time makin' both ends meet. Uncle Buzz use'ta pick up odd jobs now and then and they manged to get along by denyin' themselves but he use'ta dream of how happy they would be if he could only get a steady job.

Finally one day he landed one and he couldn't wait to get home and tell Aunt Flutey. He went rushin' up to her and he says, "At last we won't have'ta skimp anymore—I've got a steady position." She said, "What doin'?" and he says, "Night watchman." Aunt Flutey kinda choked up and she says, "Well, I thought there'd be a catch in it—you would have'ta get a job as night watchman when I just got through makin' you two new night shirts."

Steel Output Drops 4 Points To 76 Per Cent

Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 26.—Well sustained production over many weeks, during which buying has been at a relatively low rate, has brought steelmakers sufficiently close to the end of backlogs to indicate a shortening of activity to match incoming business, says Steel.

Although the rate of buying shows an increase from the low point of midsummer, it has not grown sufficiently to match shipments and some curtailment of production is necessary to meet current conditions. This situation is viewed with equanimity by steelmakers, as, in spite of not equaling earlier expectations, the industry is producing at a high and reasonably profitable rate. Well-informed expectation is that for the remainder of the year steelmaking will be at 70 to 80 per cent of the rate prevailing for the first eight months.

There are not a few reassuring facts in the week's news. Los Angeles has placed 11,050 tons of plates for a water line, the Denver & Rio Grande has ordered 13,400 tons of rails from Colorado Fuel & Iron Corporation, the New York Central has divided about 10,000 tons of steel, largely plates and shapes, for car building and repair and Ford Motor Co. is inquiring for 15,000 tons of structurals for a press shop. In addition it is understood Russia has placed an order for steel axles for cars and locomotives, sufficient to keep axle shops busy six to eight weeks.

As a result of lighter operations in important producing centers, due to adjustment to light buying, the national operating rate last week declined 4 points to 76 per cent of capacity. Pittsburgh operations declined 11 points to 73 per cent; Chicago, 3.5 points to 79.5; Wheeling, 7 to 82, and Birmingham, Ala., 8 to 83. As a partial offset to these losses, Cleveland advanced 1 point to 64; Buffalo, 4 to 74; Detroit, 5 to 100, and Cincinnati, 9 to 89. There was no change in eastern Pennsylvania at 63; Youngstown, Ohio, at 70; New England at 75, and St. Louis at 74.

Automotive production last week was a shade lower than the preceding period, with 28,030 units, compared with 30,150. General Motors made 14,000 cars, compared with 13,700; Chrysler, 3,075, compared with 1,750, with the Ford plant closed. This is probably about the low mark for the model change season and increased production may be expected to start at any time the 1938 lines are put under way more intensively.

Scrap is presenting an aspect of weakness similar to that shown in July. With a drop of $1 at Chicago, $2 at Pittsburgh, and 50 to 75 cents in eastern Pennsylvania, the situation reflects the apathy of consumers, who are definitely out of the market. A moderate sale to a steel mill in Pittsburgh last week established a price $2 under the previous nominal quotation. Closing of contracts with Eastern scrap dealers for 250,000 tons of steelmaking grades for export to Europe presents an anomaly in an increase of $2.50 per ton over a larger purchase six weeks earlier.

Decided weakness in all markets has reduced Steel's composite of steel-making scrap $1.25 from the preceding week to $17.83. This compares with $17.75 for the second week in July and $17 at the end of June, and is $4.25 below the high point in April. The decline in scrap affected the iron and steel composite also, causing a decline of 21 cents to $39.98. The finished steel composite is unchanged at $61.70.

The Market

A Special Correspondent.

Distrust of Government Policies Blamed for Business Declines.

New York, Sept. 26.—A renewal of heavy selling in the stock market and a fresh decline in bonds and commodities revived the old anxiety that a business depression of consequence may be in the making, and the losses taken by stock and commodity traders as well as the mere sight of ailing prices had the usual effect of enveloping Wall street in fog. On the surface the figures look disquieting enough.

Average stock prices with last week's late break, after a few days of comparative steadiness, fell beneath the low points of last year as well as this year and a great many stocks are now halfway down or more from their best prices reached early this spring. The softening in commodities probably was related to the stock break, as also was the weakening of bonds.

Assuredly there has been no current decline in business activities so sharp as has been the fall in stocks, and it is difficult to find in trade reports much tangible excuse for predicting as much of a trade recession as the market seems to think is coming. Business has receded somewhat, as shown by the lag in building construction, the decline in steel orders, the curtailment of railroad purchasing, the restriction of retail orders for goods because of uncertainty over public reception of higher selling prices, and the tendency of manufacturing to hold off until it could see further ahead on labor costs and taxation.

Washington Weaker Than Stocks.

Business cannot be explained by the stock market any more than stocks can be explained by business, for security prices are largely a reflection of business profits and both are swayed by the same influences. Wars and rumors have played some part in temporary fluctuations in stocks, but selling from abroad and at home has been actuated mainly by distrust of what lies ahead of business.

That distrust is of Washington's own making. It is not simply a question of the economic soundness of any given measure, such as the silver purchase act, the Wagner labor act, old age pensions and the like. Rather it is a question of the base on which has been built virtually all the Administration's policies. That base is one of distrust of the business man. It has been assumed that the American business man is fundamentally a dishonest fellow, that he needs constant restraint, that he will do wrong unless he is closely watched by some one with the authority to punish.

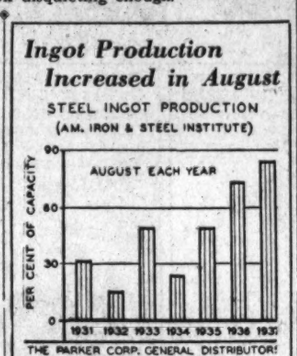
Businessmen know that they are not that sort. They know that all business is founded upon trust, upon credit. Laws and regulations governing production, the setting of wages, the fixing of prices, the investment and trading activities of businessmen and others, and especially the scheme of taxation—all assume that the citizen needs a policeman. A corporation director may see an opportunity for business expansion. He dares not go too far from shore, for his profit will depend on his costs, and they in turn are under the control largely of those who decide upon taxes (and Government spending) and who have the power and inclination to set labor costs, but who have neither the power to force nor the desire to encourage any increase in production. Likewise, the corporation official, director or large security owner, may see his security prices falling without reason. Yet he dare not support them, for he thereby will subject himself to misleading publicity, to a seizure of his money and to tax penalties.

Managed Deflation.

It is small wonder that business men lack confidence in those who so violently mistrust them. In spite of it all, the business machine, to use the metaphor of a prominent economist, is like an automobile climbing a hill with the brakes on, and as soon as the brake linings grow thin the pace may quicken abruptly. To quote this authority: "This is the first instance in the history of the world of a managed deflation engineered by a government against its own citizens. It cannot be said whether it springs from intent or ignorance."

As for the barometic quality of the stock market, faith in that must be tempered with the realization that so much tampering has been done with the mechanism that it is no longer reliable. Given a breathing spell, business ought to go ahead next year, and if so, and aided by another dose of inflation which the current break most likely will call for, stock prices next year may exceed this year's best. The chances for that are greater, to all outward appearances, than that they will go a great deal lower. As a banker-economist stated the matter before a gathering here last week: "The ordinary business indices won't function and the stock market won't perform its barometric services" under the control now being exercised.

Ingot Production Increased in August



THE PARKER CORP. GENERAL DISTRIBUTORS INCORPORATED INVESTORS

Boston, Mass., Sept. 26.—The steel mills of the country have maintained a remarkably high rate of operation right through the summer. August operating rate exceeded that of a year ago by 15 per cent and was highest for any August since 1929. Moreover, mill capacity has increased materially during recent years, and steel ingot output last month was equal to the previous record for August, back in 1929.

Insurance Stocks Close at New Low

New York, Sept. 26.—Insurance stocks in the New York City market declined to a new 1937 low at the close of the past week, according to records compiled by Hoit, Rose & Troster. The aggregate value of 20 leading firms and casualty incurance issues on September 24 totaled $545,154,000, and the new low, compared with $573,710,000 at the close of the previous week, a decrease of $28,556,000, or 4.98 per cent.

The current average yield of the 20 issues is now 4.17 per cent, compared with a yield of 3.96 per cent on September 17. The current market value equals 87 per cent of current liquidating value, against 92 per cent a week ago.

Combined earnings from underwriting and net investment income equal 7.16 per cent of market value, compared with 6.80 per cent on September 17. Quoted prices for the 20 issues now average 13.9 times their combined earnings, compared with 14.7 times at the close of the previous week.

Tomato Crop Slumps.

Luray, Va., Sept. 26.—There is a heavy slump in the tomato crop of this county, according to C. N. Graves, commissioner of revenue, and Hubert F. Lucas, member of the Luray Town Council, both of whom own canneries in different sections. Graves estimates the crop is 40 per cent below that of last year.

Wood Production Increases for Week

The lumber industry during the week ended September 18 stood at 78 per cent of the 1929 weekly average of production and 66 per cent of average 1929 shipments.

The week's reported production was 26 per cent greater than new business booked and 20 per cent heavier than reported shipments. Reported production was slightly above output of the corresponding week of 1936, shipments and orders were considerably less than in that week.

National production reported for the week by one per cent fewer mills was 11 per cent more than the output of the preceding week; shipments were 7 per cent above shipments of that week, and new orders were 16 per cent above that week's orders, according to reports to the National Lumber Manufacturers Association from regional associations covering the operations of important hardwood and softwood mills.

Survey Reports Farm Income Will Increase

Crop and Livestock Value This Year Will Be 6% Over 1936.

New York, Sept. 26.—A reappraisal of the outlook for farm income reveals that, despite the wide break in prices for many farm products during the recent past, prospects still point to an appreciable increase in the cash return from the new crops. According to estimates by the Standard Statistics Co., the total value of the crops and livestock produced this year will be approximately 6 per cent above that in 1936.

The sharp decline in quotations for many of the leading farm commodities has been an unsettling factor for some time in the outlook for agricultural income and has led many to believe that farmers might be faced with a smaller return. Wheat for December delivery sold at $1.25 a bushel in early July, but now brings only $1.05. Corn sold as high as $0.85 (December) in the summer, but the current price is around $0.63.

These and similar breaks in prices for farm products, however, are the natural consequences of the sharp rise in agricultural production this year and the relief from the scarcities created by the severe droughts of 1934 and 1936. The declines have been accentuated by the fact that, in most instances, the increases in harvests will be even greater than those indicated in the early summer.

The markets have still to contend with a heavy crop movement, and the offering of the late crops during the immediate future may lead to further pressure on prices for agricultural commodities. Any such development will be almost certain to create additional unsettlement regarding the outlook for farm income.

Employment At New High During July

New York, Sept. 26—The number of persons employed in the United States rose from 42,174,000 in June to 42,195,000 in July, a new peak for the recovery movement, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

The increase was so slight, however, that it was more than offset by the expansion in the supply of workers as the result of the gain in the population. Consequently, the number of unemployed persons in the United States rose from 9,235,000 in June to 9,244,000 in July, thus bringing to a halt the downward trend which had been in progress during the previous five months.

This increase in unemployment was contrary to the trend a year ago when unemployment showed a substantial reduction from June to July. In July this year, however, there were still 1,953,00 fewer persons unemployed than a year ago.

Phillips Petroleum Abandons Issue Plans

New York, Sept. 26 (AP).—Phillips Petroleum Co. today announced it has abandoned plans for a new stock issue owing to "unfavorable market conditions."

A month ago the company said it proposed to file a registration statement with the Securities & Exchange Commission covering an offer to stockholders of 444,905 new shares of common capital stock. Frank Phillips, president, in a letter to stockholders, said it is unnecessary to proceed with the financing in view of the company's "strong" financial condition.

Producers Announce Lower Lead Price

New York, Sept. 26 (AP).—A reduction in the price of lead of .25 of a cent a pound was announced today by two leading producers, American Smelting & Refining and the St. Joseph Lead Co.

American Smelting & Refining reduced its New York price to 6.25 cents a pound, while St. Joseph cut its New York price to 6.30 cents and its East St. Louis price to 6.10. This is the first change in price since August 5, and the first reduction since April 7.

Exchange Seat Sale Lowest Since 1935

New York, Sept. 26 (AP).—Arrangements have been made for the sale of a New York Stock Exchange membership at $72,000, off $3,000 from last transaction. This is the lowest price quoted for a seat on the exchange since April, 1935, when a membership sold for $65,000.

Annapolis Woman Sails Bonnet Into D. A. R. Presidential Ring

Mrs. Henry M. Robert Is First to Announce Candidacy.

The political pot of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution began simmering yesterday when, seven months in advance of the triennial election, Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., of Annapolis, Md., announced her candidacy for the post of president general of the organization. She is now treasurer general.

In tossing her bonnet into the ring for the coveted office, Mrs. Robert sent out an engraved announcement to newspapers throughout the country, together with photographs and biographies of herself and those on her "ticket"—ten women who are aligned with her in seeking national office.

So far as could be determined, the attractive Maryland matron is the first to announce her candidacy for president general, a post now held by Mrs. William A. Becker.

The election will be held during the forty-seventh Continental Congress of the D. A. R., to be held here during the week of April 19. The candidates on Mrs. Robert's ticket are:

For chaplain general, Mrs. Loren Edgar Rex, State regent, of Kansas; for recording secretary general, Mrs. John S. Heaume, State regent, of Ohio; for corresponding secretary general, Mrs. William Kennedy Herrin, jr., State regent, of Mississippi; for organizing secretary general, Mrs. George D. Schermerhorn, former State regent, of Michigan; for treasurer general, Miss Page Schwarzwaelder, former State treasurer, of New York, and former national chairman of the credentials committee.

For registrar general, Mrs. Frank Leon Mason, State regent, of Massachusetts; for historian general, Mrs. Leland Stanford Duxbury, State regent, of Minnesota; for reporter general to Smithsonian Institution, Mrs. Joseph Taylor Young, State regent, of California; for librarian general, Mrs. Vinton Earl Sisson, former State vice regent, of Illinois, and chairman of the committee on national defense through patriotic education; for curator general, Mrs. Willard Steele, former State regent, of Tennessee.

Mrs. Robert, who if successful, would be the seventeenth woman to preside over the D. A. R., is a graduate of Syracuse University, a member of Alpha Phi Fraternity, and a member of a number of patriotic societies. Before her marriage, she taught history in high schools in New York and New Jersey.

She is a descendant of Elder William Brewster, Clement Corbin, Dr. Comfort Starr and other leaders of early New England. Her husband was the son of Gen. Henry M. Robert, who wrote the well-known Robert's Rules of Arder, a standard parliamentary guide, which has been translated into many foreign languages. Mrs. Robert herself has given special lecture courses on parliamentary law in two universities, has conducted classes for club women and for several years had edited a question-and-answer column in parliamentary procedure.

She has served in many chapters and State offices and as national chairman of the patriotic education committee and as chairman of the credentials committee. As treasurer general, she spends much of her time at D. A. R. headquarters in Washington, commuting between here and her home in Annapolis.

Mrs. Benjamin Harrison, wife of a twenty-third President of the United States, was the first president general of the D. A. R. She was followed by Mrs. Adlai Stevenson, wife of the Vice President of the United States. The D. A. R. has nearly 150,000 members, with chapters in every State and in Alaska, Canal Zone, Cuba, Hawaii, Philippine Islands, Puerto Rico, China, England, France, Germany and Italy.
